Nazis 35 Miles From Paris; French Smother Parachutists; Norse Give Up, Allies Flee Narvik; Roosevelt Prepares 'Important' War Statement

President's Talk To Be Broadcast At 6:15 Tonight At U. of Virginia

By William V. Nessly

"A very important pronouncement" on the war will be made by President Roosevelt this evening in a speech at Charlottesville, Va., the White House announced late last night.

Shortly before midnight, Stephen T. Early, secretary to the President, told the press:

"The President decided late this evening to leave Washington tomorrow afternoon by train for Charlottesville to attend graduating exercises at the University of Virginia. He will speak from 6:15 to 6:30 p. m., Washington time. You can safely say he will deliver a very important pronouncement regarding the World War and the present state of international affairs."

The address is expected to be carried by the three major American broadcasting chains and to be rebroadcast in seven languages.

Mr. Roosevelt started working on the draft of his address while still on his week-end cruise on the Potomac, from which he returned at 4 p. m. With him on the cruise along with other guests was Alexander F. Kirk, charge d'affaires at the American Embassy at Berlin, who returned several days ago to report on conditions in Germany.

May Concern Italy

The President's son, Franklin, Jr., is to receive his law degree at the University of Virginia today, but recently some doubt had been expressed that the President, because of pressing international matters, would be able to attend the exercises.

Since Mr. Roosevelt has been devoting extraordinary efforts recently to induce the Italian government not to become an active participant in the war, there was immediate speculation that the President's pronouncement might deal with developments in that move.

At the same time, it appeared, in view of the fact that the decision to make the address was reached while conferring with Kirk, that the field of possible topics was wide open.

Steps to Aid Allies

The interest-gripping announcement came in the midst of wide discussion here of steps, short of war, which this country might take to aid the embattled democracies of Europe.

America is no longer a "neutral" but a "nonbelligerent" on the Allied side, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, said on the radio as he called for help to England and France "to the utmost of our capacities" while not entering the war or weakening our own defenses.

Increased concern over fifth column dangers were expressed by other national legislators as Congress, with but 12 days remaining before the Presidentially-set adjournment date, sought to speed pending rearmament appropriations and other defense measures.

Ask War Declaration

The defense situation had these other angles:

An immediate declaration of war against Germany was advocated by 30 educators, lawyers, industrialists and others in a statement issued here.

Representative May, of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, said

S. S. Roosevelt Docks After 'Pretty Rough' Trip From Ireland; Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt And Mrs. Robert Montgomery Are Aboard

By the Associated Press

New York, June 9.—Refugees from the threat of warfare in England, more than 700 men, women and children tonight sailed into the haven of a neutral land from Galway, Ireland, aboard the liner President Roosevelt.

That this threat was real was emphasized by the number of English subjects aboard—mostly women and children.

A few passengers had gone through actual bombing raids in Belgium, but most of them came from England. They all had a terrifying time at sea during a 24-hour storm.

Some said they thought for a while the ship would break in two; others feared a torpedo had hit it.

The ship, equipped for only 550 passengers, carried double that number and most of them were seasick. Two hundred and twenty-five were children, of whom 135 were under five years of age.

Everybody put up with discomforts with a grin, however, sleeping in passageways, under staircases, in public rooms, in the third class dining room and wherever a mattress or cot could be placed.

Meals were served in four shifts, with the dining room open from early morning until just before midnight so that all could be fed.

Paul Davis, one of the Americans aboard, got back to England from Dunkerque, Belgium, aboard a British destroyer. The ship, which he said British authorities asked him not to name, was bombed by a squadron of German planes.

"I got there in a truck," he said. "We were bombed in Dunkerque. Some of them landed too damn close for comfort. I didn't see the planes. Let me tell you, I was kissing the deck. It lasted about half an hour, but the antiaircraft kept them pretty high."

Bullitt Tells France U. S. Prays for Her

White House Has No Comment on Talk By Ambassador

Domremy, France, June 9.—William C. Bullitt, United States ambassador to France, declared today that "from one end of this earth to the other every civilized man is praying, after his fashion, for the victory of France."

Here at the birthplace of Joan of Arc, at the close of a ceremonial presentation of an altar donated by Americans to the village church, the ambassador placed a white rose at the feet of a statue of the Maid of Orleans, in the name of President Roosevelt.

Joan of Arc worshiped at this church in her childhood five centuries ago.

Only a small group was present at the ceremony. Crowds were not permitted because of the danger from flights of German planes over the Domremy region, about 90 miles south of the now German-held junction of the French, Belgian and Luxembourg borders.

Policeman's Son, 17, Drowned As Canoe Upsets in Potomac

Joseph Harry Dellinger, jr., 17, son of a Washington policeman, was drowned yesterday when his canoe capsized in the treacherous Potomac River currents at Chain Bridge. A 14-year-old companion, Albert Cyr, of Arlington, Va., was rescued by Charles H. Ward, United States deputy marshal, who was fishing in a small boat downstream.

Several hours later, Prince Georges County (Md.) police reported the body of a man had been found in a marsh along the Patuxent River near Nottingham. The man was dressed like a carpenter and had a rule and blueprints in his clothing. Police believed he had been drowned.

Mrs. Mattie Roy Dellinger, who lives at 925 North Jackson street, Arlington, Va., said her son and the Cyr boy had told her they were going for a drive with the Cyr youngster's parents.

She said her son had been suffering from a nervous disorder for four years and she would never have allowed him to go canoeing. She said he couldn't swim and had never been boating before.

Onlookers said the canoe overturned as the youngsters attempted to swing it around in midstream. The Dellinger boy disappeared in the rapids after he tried vainly to cling to the side of the canoe. The Cyr boy was swept a quarter of a mile downstream before he was picked up.

Ward, who lives at 4611 Harling lane, Bethesda, has figured in several rescues in the last few years. He was fishing with a companion, Carroll Whitlock, of Washington, when the Cyr boy was swept down the river, shouting for help.

Mrs. Dellinger was hysterical with grief. "This is about the first time he has even been out of my sight since he took sick about four years ago," she sobbed. "If only I had known he was going canoeing, it would never have happened."

King Haakon Goes to England; Entire Country In German Grip

By Thomas F. Hawkins
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stockholm (Monday), June 10.—All Norway was surrendered to Germany Sunday at midnight after a fight of exactly two months against the Nazi invaders, but King Haakon and his government, who fled to England, announced they would help the British and French on the Western Front.

The British and French, who gave aid to Norway throughout the conflict, were reported withdrawing from their hard-won gains at Narvik and along the Narvik Railway in the far north, the only territory they had been able to wrest from the Germans since the invasion began April 9 with Nazi seizure of that ore port, Oslo, and other Norwegian cities.

Needed on Other Fronts

"Necessity of the war forced the Allies to gather all their forces on other fronts where all soldiers and all materials are necessary," said an announcement today by the Norwegian Government News Agency.

"Norwegian soldiers, who during two months of war fought bravely, now do not have ammunition and fighting planes enough and cannot go on fighting against the German power."

(Early this morning, the peace still was unannounced in Berlin, although DNB, official news agency, reported Haakon's flight.)

The method or extent of Norwegian help for the Allies on the Western Front was not made clear.

The peace agreement was reported from Tromsoe, in the far north of Norway, by the Norwegian Government News Agency which said the agreement was officially announced.

Saturday the Allies were reported to have driven the Germans to the next to last railway tunnel on their retreat from Narvik to the Swedish frontier.

Germans, smuggled into Narvik under the decks of freighters, took that port despite supposed British naval control of the North Sea.

Subsequently a British and French force was landed north and south of Trondheim, on the west coast, in an effort to take that point in a pincers movement. But German armored divisions established contact through Dombas, and forced the British to withdraw from Andalsnes and Namsos on May 2 and 3.

With the Germans in control of all Norway except the far north, where they held a tenuous grip on Narvik, the Allies transferred their chief operations to that Arctic port, and captured it May 28.

But well-informed Norwegians believed the peace terms had left Germany in full control of all Norway.

They professed no knowledge of an earlier report by the correspondent of the Swedish newspaper Dagens Nyheter that the Allied commanders also had participated in the peace and that the Germans had agreed not to press their offensive beyond a certain point which would leave the Norwegians

Carrier Sunk In Naval Duel, Berlin Claims

H. M. S. Glorious, Two Nazi Battleships Battled in North Sea

By Clinton B. Conger
United Press Staff Writer

Berlin, June 9.—The British aircraft carrier Glorious, with a normal complement of 1,216, including officers and men of the fleet air arm, was sunk by two German battleships in a naval battle yesterday in the far reaches of the North Sea, the high command claimed today.

The Glorious was a sister ship of the Courageous, sunk last September 17 by a German U-boat somewhere near the western entrance to the English Channel with a loss of 500 men. The Courageous was the first major loss of the war to the British navy.

A British destroyer, the 21,000-ton troop transport Orama, the naval tanker Oil Pioneer and a modern submarine chaser also were sunk, the Germans said.

The high command said that the battleships Gneisenau and Scharnhorst, both of which had been reported sunk or badly damaged in battle off Norway, sent the Glorious to the bottom in a terrific sea fight.

The two battleships led a German naval action in the North Sea for relief of troops still trapped by the Allies in northern Norway, it was said.

These open operations were taken in some quarters here to presage increasingly intense German naval activity and military quarters pointed out that, according to the communique, the Germans suffered no losses in the engagements, other details of which were not related.

WEARY AND OUTNUMBERED, French poilus are fighting desperately to stem the relentless onrush of nearly 2,000,000 German soldiers, hammering a jagged, bending 160-mile line.

IN THE WEST, NAZI TANKS which had passed the Allies' Bresle River line nearest the coast, stabbed to Rouen on the Seine and branched off to Gisors, 35 miles northwest of Paris.

TWENTY MILES NORTHEAST of Gisors, Nazi infantry pounding directly at Paris from the north reached Beauvais, an advance of 20 miles Sunday. Fifty miles farther east, 10 Nazi divisions were across the Aisne on both sides of Soissons, and as at Beauvais were only about 35 miles from Paris.

BETWEEN SOISSONS AND THE MAGINOT Line, a front heretofore comparatively quiet, the Germans hurled 600,000 men forward in the Argonne sector. Here, the French said, the enemy was "clearly" checked, but there were no such claims elsewhere.

ANOTHER FRONT WAS SILENCED, when the Allies withdrew from Narvik, Norway's Arctic port, two months to the day after Hitler's Scandinavian invasion, and the Norwegians laid down their arms while the King fled to England.

Allied Flank Torn to Pieces, Germans Say

Attempt to Check Attack 'Has Failed,' High Command Claims

By C. Brooks Peters
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, June 9.—For the first time since the start of the great offensive against France last Wednesday, the high command today lifted slightly the veil in which the activities of the German forces have been shrouded and declared:

"The attempt of the enemy to hold up the German attack, at any price, has failed."

In the four-day battle in the Somme-Oise sector, the Germans declared, the right wing of their air, artillery and tank units "beat to pieces strong enemy forces" and forced other enemy troops, some of which were freshly brought up to attempt to stop the invader, to retreat.

Pushing along the coast "in the direction of the lower Seine," Germans assert, they have broken through the rear defense lines of the French and have captured large quantities of supplies. It is said in informed quarters here, moreover, that the German advance has almost reached the lower Seine somewhere between Rouen and Le Havre. It is hoped, it would appear, to cut off Le Havre from Rouen and therewith Paris, and thus drive a further wedge between France and England.

At the same time should the Germans succeed in taking Rouen, or encircling it, they will have, should they desire, a basis for operations against Paris from the northwest. All indications are that Paris is the immediate goal of the German

Maginot Guns Shell Siegfried Wall; 1,800,000 Battle Poilus

By Henry C. Cassidy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris (Monday), June 10.—The Germans, rushing mechanized blitz troops to a region but 35 miles northwest of Paris, launched a "massive" parachute attack on the open Champagne country to the northeast of the capital yesterday where French troops were reported to have surrounded them promptly in the region north of Vouziers.

Combining aerial tactics with the titantic land offensive of 1,800,000 men, the Nazi command for the first time in the battle of France dropped large numbers of air infantry into the fields.

These units joined the overland divisions smashing southward in what Generalissimo Maxime Weygand of France proclaimed was "the last quarter hour."

German Panzer divisions, pushing along the Andelle Valley, reached the outskirts of Rouen on the Seine, and penetrated into Pont de l'Arche and in the Lepte Valley town of Gisors, but 35 miles northwest of Paris. (Two lines censored).

Extend Front

With German mechanized columns roaming behind the French west flank in a pronged movement aimed at severing Paris from her ports at Rouen and Le Havre, the Germans early yesterday threw 600,000 fresh troops and 3,500 tanks into a new offensive in the Argonne, thus extending the active front to the Luxembourg border.

It was in this battle that the Germans dropped their swarms of parachutists.

The French said they had smothered this huge assault, but Generalissimo Weygand, in an order to his troops, alluded to the possibility of development of the battle clear to Switzerland.

The great guns of France's Maginot Line opened up against Germany's Siegfried Wall across the Rhine in a previously "quiet" sector today, and hurled shells over the river for an hour and 25 minutes, drawing a hot German reply.

The sudden French outburst apparently either was an attempt to break up a concentration of 20 German divisions reported secretly moving into the edges of the Black Forest, or to create a diversion for the hard-pressed defenders in the west.

Another Meeting Called

Premier Reynaud called another meeting of the French cabinet for 7 p. m. today (1 p. m., E. S. T.) at the War Ministry, after having reviewed the military situation with his ministers and President Lebrun for an hour and a half last night.

The new call to the cabinet meant the government was in strong support of its fighting forces, French said. The more important files and papers of some of the government departments have been moved out of Paris as a precautionary measure.

Driving rapidly ahead with their mechanized scouting detachments to the west, and releasing their parachutists on the east, the Germans apparently were attempting a three-

28,000 Visit Zoo, 1,500 on Picnics as Mercury Hits 87

An alternately sunny and cloudy Sunday, with temperatures reaching to 87 degrees, drew 28,000 visitors to the Zoo and clogged the highways leading out of the city with thousands of pleasure cars.

About 1,500 picnickers flooded Rock Creek Park's 25 picnic groves, the Park Police reported.

A 3-year-old adventurer caused one of the day's two disturbances in the park when he became bored with the sights of the reptile house and started on a solo exploration of the Zoo. An unidentified middle-aged woman, who fell off her horse, was the only other source of excitement, police said.

The boy was Robert Sanders, of Baltimore, Md. He was found at Potomac and Beach drives after a two-hour search by Sergt. L. A. Tabinski, of the Park Police, and his mother, Mrs. Lee Sanders

England Bombed By Nazi Posing As British Flier

New York, June 9 (AP).—The story of a daring ruse by a German aviator who flew his plane with a British Royal Air Force squadron over England and thus effected a surprise bombing attack was told tonight by a passenger returning home aboard the liner President Roosevelt.

The Rev. Francis D. Wieland, of Washington and Brooklyn, said an Irish pilot told him the story. How true it was Father Wieland could not say.

According to the story, the British squadron had made a bombing raid over Germany. As it was heading for home, the German flier nonchalantly joined the squadron and flew unsuspected back to England with it. He then unloosed his bombs at a point near Chichester, the Irish pilot's story went on, but there was no word as to the damage caused.

Paris Grows Uneasy as War Comes Nearer; Thousands Flee

By P. J. Philip
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, June 9.—Those who have lived through this day in Paris will never forget it. It is going to be remembered for all time as the gloomy Sunday.

The firing of an antiaircraft barrage awakened many. No one knew whether to hope or to fear. The sugar-coating policy which has always characterized French comment left newspaper readers and the radio listeners confused rather than enlightened. Many went to church, for there, at least, they might find, they felt, some refuge from the anxiety which was gnawing in every heart.

There were prayers to be said for those at the front in that fantastic battle which seems each day to rise from climax to climax on fury into which the Fuehrer keeps pouring more men and more machines with a frenzy of energy never before let loose on the world.

The city, largely deserted in these last weeks and days with only rare autobuses and taxicabs, was still and eerie.

For most people the great issue was whether to go or stay. Great gray auto-trucks lined up outside of public buildings showed clearly that some, at least, of the public services were being evacuated. There were signs of packing everywhere. Private cars were being filled with the usual miscellaneous collection of oddments.

As the day advanced the evacuation fever seemed to spread. More and more loaded trucks and cars began to drift toward the outlets of the city. At the railroad stations from which many trains are still running, the crowds of refugees, mostly incomers to the city from the east and north waiting to go elsewhere, grew hour by hour, and never seemed to lessen.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

ADOLF DREAMS ON HIS TERRACE

One summer evening, sitting on the terrace of his mountain hideout, Adolf Hitler conquered South America.

Harlan Miller

His schemes are significant, in view of the current alarm about our exposed flank to the south, sending of cruisers, talk of landing Marines at Natal, in Brazil, and the leasing of air bases to the south.

• • • •

The story is told in "The Voice of Destruction," by Herman Rauschning, who was a member of the Reichstag, a friend of Hitler, and who was on the terrace the evening Hitler took Brazil. It was after dinner. Hitler had been questioning a trusted leader of the Sturmabteilung just back from South America.

• • • •

"We shall create a new Germany there," he cried with the excitement he often feels at such moments.

"We shall find everything we need there." There, he exclaimed, was a "corrupt mestizo state" which by revolution could—this was in 1933—be transformed into a German dominion in a few years.

His scheme was to woo the Latin aristocrats while inciting the peons to rebel against them.

Here in Washington, these schemes of Hitler are vividly in the minds of State, War and Navy officials, and of Latin-American diplomats, as they focus now on the Trojan Horse south of the Rio Grande and south of the Canal.

• • • •

"Besides, we have a right to that continent," Hitler went on, "for the Fuggers and Welsers had possessions there. The time has passed for us to give place to Spain and Portugal."

The Fuggers were a wealthy German family which helped pillage South America 300 years ago.

"—Hitler's corrupt mestizo state"

With the United States, Hitler asserted confidently, the Latin Americans were fed up: "They knew they were being exploited by them, and had nothing to expect from them for the development of their country."

• • • •

But if they weren't sure of this, Hitler was ready to help them realize it, by sending over "energetic, unscrupulous representatives of overseas Germanhood."

"Our conquistadores, my dear von P.," he said, "have a more difficult task than the original ones, and for this reason they have more difficult weapons."

• • • •

"We shall make them a gift: our philosophy," said Hitler. "If ever there is a place where democracy is senseless and suicidal, it is in South America. They must be enabled to throw both their liberalism and their democracy overboard."

• • • •

"But we must send our people out to them," Hitler said, and when he says something like that it's jotted down on the cuff as an order. "Our youth must learn to colonize . . . Audacious youth is what we want. They need not go into the jungle, either, to clear the ground. What we want are people in good (South American) society."

• • • •

Von P., a pioneer of the Nazi propaganda in South America, demurred. He felt that "good society" was not a good bet for propaganda. He thought "we should attain our purpose more quickly by making use of other classes, such as the Indios and the mestizos."

"—incite Indians vs. aristocrats"

"Both, my dear von P.," Hitler interrupted impatiently. "We require two movements abroad, a loyal and a revolutionary one. Do you think that's so difficult? I think we have proved that we are capable of it. We should not be here otherwise."

• • • •

In other words, Hitler's scheme for South America is to stuff Nazi fifth columnists and agitators both into the government groups and into the revolutionists in South America; to get "loyalist" Nazis into the high places and "revolutionary" Nazis into the masses.

• • • •

Hitler decreed that along with Brazil, both Argentina and Bolivia were in "the first line of Nazi interest." He propounded ideas "later realized by Bohle on the one hand and Ribbentrop on the other, in two mutually antagonistic onslaughts of propaganda."

• • • •

A year later Hitler turned his attention actively to Mexico. That was in 1934, so the Nazis have had six years to work on the Mexicans . . . By this time Adolf Hitler must be closer to reclaiming the heritage of the Fuggers and making the Latins a gift of his "philosophy."

30 Leaders Sign Petition Urging U. S. to Declare War on Reich

Manifesto Cites Nazi Regime as 'Our Mortal Foe'

A petition urging the United States to declare war immediately on Germany was disclosed here yesterday bearing the signatures of 30 prominent Americans, among them lawyers, educators, industrialists and a member of the Rockefeller Foundation.

With a preamble relating to American temper in the war crisis and describing the Nazi government as the "mortal enemy of our ideals," the document asserted "the United States should immediately give official recognition to the fact and to the logic of the situation by declaring that a state of war exists between this country and Europe."

The list of signers included Stacy May, of New York City, assistant director for Social Sciences, Rockefeller Foundation; William H. Standley, admiral, U. S. N., retired; Stringfellow Barr, president, St. John's College; Herbert Agar, editor, the Louisville Courier-Journal; Frank R. Kent, political commentator, the Baltimore Sun; Edward T. Gushee, of St. Louis, public utilities executive; LeRoy Hodges, comptroller, State of Virginia; James F. Curtis, lawyer, New York City; Walter Mills, of New York City, author of "The Road to War;" J. Douglas Brown, Princeton University; George Watts Hill, Durham, N. C., cotton, hosiery and dairy executive, and Henry Wise Hobson, of Cincinnati, Bishop of the Southern Diocese, Ohio, Episcopal Church.

Reflect No Single Group

Francis P. Miller, lawyer, of Fairfax, Va., one of the signers, said that the petition reflected the stand of no organization; that five or six of the signers were talking last week of the European situation, and the manifesto was its result.

Others, among their acquaintances, were shown the petition, and of 100 or more of them only four or five gave a negative reaction to the war declaration sentiment, he said.

"In the German view," the petition read, "the American defense program means that the United States has already joined with Great Britain and France in opposing the Nazi drive for world dominion. In the American view, Nazi Germany is the mortal enemy of our ideals, our institutions and our way of life.

"What we have, what we are and what we hope to be can now be most effectively defended on the line in France held by Gen. Weygand. The frontier of our national interest is now on the Somme.

"Therefore, all disposable air, naval, military and material resources of the United States should be made available at once to help maintain our common front."

Ceased to Be Neutral

Such resources, however, it was said, "cannot be made available fast enough to hold the German army in check on the European continent or to prepare for the eventual attack on American interests so long as the United States remains legally neutral. Nation-wide endorsement of the defense program shows that the American people has ceased to be neutral in any other sense."

Calling for the declaration of war, it was said that "only in this constitutional manner can the energies be massed which are indispensable to the successful prosecution of a program of defense.

National unity was demanded. "Above all, the representatives of the people must be made aware that they have only a short breathing spell left within which to prove their capacity to organize a united initiative. For unless they act diligently and wholly in the national interest, forgetting themselves and their political ambitions, they will presently find themselves washed out—and our institutions with them—by the waters that are rising over the whole world."

Tell Views to Press

Persons sharing such views were invited to express "them publicly through the free democratic institution of the American press."

U. S., Seeking Skilled Labor, May Comb Private Industry

Huge Naval Construction Program Reveals Pressing Need for Machinists, Shipfitters and Similar Types of Workers

By Edward Ryan

The Navy is planning to rove afield into the private construction industry to find skilled workers to build its battleships.

Naval hiring officers, unable to find the skilled shipfitters they need, have asked Civil Service officials to open an examination for structural iron workers, it was learned.

These men will be trained on the jobs for the heavy metal work handled by shipfitters. The move, officials explained, will permit boosting some of the most highly skilled shipfitters already in the Navy Yards to loftsmen jobs.

In every major Navy Yard on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, examinations are being held open for both shipfitter and loftsman jobs, and the Navy has not been finding enough of them.

The structural iron workers examination, officials said, will be used to set up a reserve of men experienced in bridge building, and handling heavy sheet metals, a type of background that will give them a running start for skilled shipyard work.

In the Washington area the heaviest need for skilled shipfitters and loftsmen is at the Norfolk Navy Yard. Skilled explosives operators, shipwrights and coppersmiths are also being sought for work there.

At the Washington Navy Yard the major demand, officials said, will be for machinists. In February, the local labor board for the navy yard here had about 1,700 machinists on its lists. Jobs for them have been opening steadily and about one out of three has accepted appointment. This list, officials said, has been nearly exhausted, while at least 1,000 more machinists are expected to be wanted there during the next year.

Also wanted at the Washington yard are skilled lens makers. Civil service field men have combed the area around Rochester and Buffalo, N. Y., centers of large optical instrument plants, for these men, and they are still after more. The lens and prism makers are employed at the navy yard in making gun sights.

Center of the local drive to find skilled men for military factories is the Washington field office of the Civil Service Commission, at 820 Seventh street northwest, in charge of civilian employe recruiting for the District, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina.

Its 70 employes have already started to work one hour overtime a day to handle the increased recruiting load for the defense program, and many are staying at work until 10 or 11 p. m.

Along with their search for skilled employes, officials of the Washington office are also searching for methods to keep away two types of workers—unskilled laborers and clerical workers. For these the defense program so far means no jobs.

Here is the way personnel officials in Government offices are planning to describe, in standard definitions, some of the happy and unhappy things that happen to Federal employes:

Promotion—The change of an incumbent of one position to a position in a higher class.

Increase of pay—Increase in compensation within the salary range of the same class, given in recognition of satisfactory performance. Not to be confused with "promotion."

Salary reduction—A decrease in salary within the salary range of the same class. Not to be confused with "demotion."

Separation for cause—The removal of an employe from his position for incompetence, insubordination or conduct detrimental to the interests of the service.

Transfer—The change of an employe from one position to another position of the same class, or a similar class of the same level, in the same or a different location or organization.

The definitions are part of a series described by the Society for Personnel Administration in its new bulletin.

The defense speedup helped boost Government employment in the District to a new all-time high in April, the Civil Service Commission reported.

The total local employment rose by 1,034 persons to 129,677 during the month, while their pay roll increased from $22,727,942 to $22,948,295. Most of the increase came in the Navy Department, Commerce, Agriculture and Interior departments and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The national total of Federal employes rose from 945,836 in March, to 959,146 in April, and their pay roll from $143,912,985 to $144,837,840.

Stimson Pleads for Unlimited Aid to Allies

New York, June 9.—Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State in the Hoover Administration, urged today that immediate aid be given to the Allies and that a system of universal military training and service in the United States be established.

In a letter addressed to the editor of the New York Herald Tribune, Stimson said:

"Too long have we obstinately refused to see that the battle being waged by the Allies is our battle."

Stimson praised Gen. John J. Pershing's support of unlimited aid to the Allies.

While making it clear that he regarded aid to the Allies as the first line of national defense, Stimson sounded a grim warning that "in a few months we may be confronting a victorious coalition of Fascist powers, with not only enormous military strength, but with a naval strength, actual and potential, which may exceed ours."

The complete text of Stimson's letter follows:

"To the Editor of the New York Herald Tribune:

"May I express my thanks for and hearty concurrence with your fine editorials of yesterday pointing out the immediate duty of our Government in the crisis which now confron's us.

"As your first point you stress the necessity of immediate and thorough-going help to the Allies in their present desperate situation. As your second point you lend your approval to the effort of the 'Plattsburg movement' to create again the system of officers' training camps which were so successful in 1915 and 1916 and to encourage the Federal Government in enacting legislation which will establish the democratic system of universal compulsory training and service on the part of our citizens to meet the emergency which now confronts us.

"We Are Prone to Forget"

"I believe you are right in embracing both these movements in a common approval. Each of them is vitally essential to preserve this country from the horrors of the war in Europe which are now being unrolled before our eyes.

"We are prone to forget that the defensive policy of all peace-loving nations like ourselves must always have not one but two main objectives. Our governments must not only endeavor with all their might to prevent war from coming to their people, but secondly and quite as important, they must make sure that if, contrary to their earnest desire, their country is forced to enter war it shall go in on such conditions that it will not lose but win the war; that it will not be exposed to the worst evil of all—ultimate conquest by a brutal enemy.

"These dangers lie immediately before us. In fact, their threat is now being thrust into our faces. Too long have we obstinately refused to see that the battle being waged by the Allies is our battle. Gen. Pershing expressed it yesterday with a clearness and force which cannot be improved when he said:

"'The Allies are fighting a war for civilization. They are holding our front line and we have a vital concern in the outcome. We should send not only food, clothing and medical supplies, but also arrange to send airplanes, artillery, small arms and ammunition in unlimited quantities. There is no time to lose. The Allies need every encouragement it is possible for us to give. Let us do so promptly and enthusiastically. There should be, there must be, no delay.'

"As you point out in your editorial, our Government has now effectively begun to move in this respect—to work not only for more battleships and an immense fleet of airplanes, which necessarily cannot be created until a somewhat distant future, but to aid the Allies now with such weapons as we already have while there is still a French army and a British air force ready and able to use them. The steps thus taken by our Government should meet with united national approval.

"So far as he can, each citizen should show that America stands united behind this action. The voice of partisanship on this matter should be stilled. On this I, as a Republican, am happy to follow your leadership as a Republican newspaper in stressing the importance of such unity. The moral effect of a demonstration of national unity on this subject in itself will increase the effectiveness of the support thus given.

"Whatever the issues and results of the coming Presidential election, the present Administration under our Constitution will be our Government until the first of next January. An action so clearly right and important to the future safety of America as this step of preventing a breakdown of what Gen. Pershing calls 'our front line' should not be impaired or hamstrung by the voice of party criticism.

"But the immediate help which we can give is very limited. In spite of it the Allies may be defeated and even conquered. Even the British sea power which protected us during our preparation in 1917 and 1918 may be broken in the disaster across the seas. In a very few months we may be confronting a victorious coalition of Fascist powers with not only enormous military strength, but with a naval strength, actual and potential, which may exceed ours.

"The shipbuilding capacity of continental Europe, which may then be under Nazi control, far exceeds that of the United States. In such a situation it is manifest that we should not only be taking steps to increase our limited material, but preparing our citizenship for the defensive exertions which lie before it. That is a task which not only involves 'the enlistment of every able-bodied citizen in some appropriate division of the national defense,' as you describe it, but it involves a revolutionary change in morale—in our attitude toward national duty—from the easy going laissez faire isolationism which has enveloped us during the past decade.

"There is no time now to criticize the past. The stern realities of a hard old world again confront us. I speak from my own observation when I say that there is no school which can so promptly and thoroughly and with such democratic respect for the rights of all individuals inculcate this indispensable lesson throughout our nation as the creation of a system of universal training and service.

Imbued With Common Spirit

"As a member of one of the divisions chosen under the selective service law of 1917, it was my privilege to watch the development of character, discipline and responsibility which took place among the men in that division during the months of our training and service.

"The division was composed of men of many differing racial stocks, as well as of differing stations of life, but soon they became imbued with a common spirit of national unity which not only carried them through the hardships and suffering of an arduous campaign but gave them a common fellowship which has to a surprising extent lasted during the years following their war service. To myself that experience brought a new faith in the vitality of our American citizenship.

"I, therefore, believe that the reintroduction now, in the face of the present emergency, of a system of universal training and service, applying it not only to military training, as was done in 1917, but extending it so as to cover many civilian activities which directly conduce to military efficiency, will not only prepare us for the physical strain of war if it comes to us, but will at the same time give us a united morale and patriotism, which is even more essential.

"It will not only enable our army to fill at once such gaps in our forces as the proposed 95,000 enlistments which the chief of staff recently testified in Congress could not be obtained by voluntary enlistment, but, far more important, it would begin to discipline and train our minds for the stern experience which may be before us."

U. of Virginia To Graduate 495 Today

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., June 9.—Dr. Ivey F. Lewis, dean of the University of Virginia, was honored upon the completion of his twenty-fifth year as a member of the faculty in an unscheduled feature of the celebration for the class of 1940 graduating tomorrow.

Dean Lewis was presented with a silver service and a bound volume of letters from friends, former students and associates, in the impromptu ceremony held under the portico of the historic rotunda. The presentation was made by Lewis C. Williams, of Richmond, member of the board of visitors.

From the rotunda tomorrow afternoon a graduating class of 495, the largest in the institution's history, will march in academic procession down the lawn to the McIntire Amphitheater. The graduates will receive degrees from the hands of President John Lloyd Newcomb and will hear an address by President Roosevelt if the Nation's Chief Executive can arrange to attend. The President's son, Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., will be among the graduates in law.

Baccalaureate Sermon

This morning the graduates heard a baccalaureate address by the Rev. Dr. Walter M. Haushalter, pastor of the Christian Temple, Baltimore, who said that out of the present conflicting crisis a new and better world would emerge.

Present times, he said, need "the happy warrior" who "is not afraid of discipline, hardship" and who "places his confidence in the cause of good and draws confidence from heaven's laws."

Dr. Haushalter said "the world of our forefathers has faced crises before, crises as tumultuous as ours. The world, as it were, comes to an end, but it is only the bad that comes to an end. The good survives and gathers itself for a new and regenerated effort. In such a day we live."

Tomorrow morning the class of 1940 will gather on the portico of the rotunda to hear a formal farewell by the class president, Randolph Garnett, of Norfolk. Class gifts will be presented by Yuille Holt, of Lynchburg.

Dean Honored

Williams, in making the presentation to Dean Lewis, said the dean was being honored as teacher, administrator and churchman.

Testimonials presented to Dean Lewis had been gathered by a committee made up of T. F. Ball, University of South Carolina; Dr. W. C. Coker, University of North Carolina; Miss Ruth Patrick, Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences; Dr. H. P. Johnson, Miss Mary Proffitt, Dr. Joseph K. Roberts, Dr. B. F. D. Runk, all University of Virginia; Dr. L. L. Woodruff, Yale University, and Dr. Conway Zirkle, University of Pennsylvania.

Memorial Held At Boyds Church

Memorial rites were held last night at the Boyds, (Md.) Presbyterian Church cemetery. The services were conducted by the pastor, the Rev. James P. Kerr, who delivered the memorial address. Children of the community placed a flower on each grave and a flag was placed on the grave of the only former service man in the cemetery. A song service preceded the exercises.

Yesterday afternoon, the Montgomery County Singing Convention, which is composed of 250 representatives of 25 churches, met in the Boyds Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Raymond Hunter Brown, pastor of Salem Methodist Church, Cedar Grove, led the singing, with Ivan Lawson at the piano.

Pantomime Given

Presentation of the pantomime, "Nearer My God to Thee," featured the annual Children's Day program at St. Luke's Lutheran Church, at Redland, Md., last evening. The Rev. Ralph Hershberger, pastor, delivered a sermon on "I Want My Own Way." There were also songs and recitations.

C. U. Professor Cites Selfishness For World's Woes

Dr. William H. Russell, of Catholic University, yesterday blamed human selfishness for society's present upheavals.

"In a society where every man strives mainly for himself and forgets his brother, there are bound to be upheavals," the department of religion professor told an audience at the Washington Catholic Evidence Guild services in Franklin Park, Fourteenth and K streets northwest.

"In our present economic situation, where life seems so bleak and hopeless, men are beginning to see that there must be some spiritual truth at the basis of society if that society is to endure in peace," said he, insisting that "the innate selfishness of man cannot be cured by law or by any materialistic view of life."

President, Institute of Life Insurance

NO MATTER why it happens, a man hates to drop his life insurance. And your insurance company doesn't like it, either.

The company, when it takes in a new policyholder who doesn't stick, is in much the same position as a landlord who makes improvements for his tenants—only to have them move out soon afterwards.

On the other hand, some tenants have good reasons for moving. And so do some policyholders have good reasons for dropping their life insurance.

For instance, a man may buy insurance to protect his aged mother. If the mother dies, he may want to drop the policy. In most cases, however, he would be much better off if he kept it—refitting it to meet his present or prospective needs.

Or, a man may take out a policy because he is taking financial risks in his business. But if he stops taking these risks he may no longer want that protection. So he allows the policy to lapse.

Many lapses are caused by unavoidable misfortune such as losing a job or a temporary financial setback. And some occur because the policyholder was not entirely convinced in the first place.

After 20 years of experience in dealing with people, however, I am of the opinion that one of the causes of lapse goes right back to human nature. We start lots of things—from correspondence courses to savings-bank accounts—and then fail to keep them up.

HERE are some suggestions that may help you avoid lapse. It's a good idea to review, once in a while, what your insurance program will do, so as to remind you that it's worth fighting for. And your agent or your company should always be notified well in advance if you can foresee a possible lapse.

You'll find that your company, like all others, has several different means of helping to tide over the man who has a run of hard luck and good agents do not spare themselves in trying to keep even the smallest policy from lapsing.

NOTE: In this regular Monday column, paid for at advertising rates, the Institute of Life Insurance has asked the president to discuss questions of interest to life insurance policyholders. Inquiries may be addressed to 60 East 42nd Street, New York City.

Record Throng Sees West Point Graduates Parade, Get Honors

Two Washington Youths Are Among Outstanding Cadets

By Elizabeth Henney
Post Staff Writer

West Point, N. Y., June 9.—Before the largest crowd ever assembled at West Point, a regimental parade and presentation of stars and awards to outstanding cadets at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon climaxed the day's June week festivities at the United States Military Academy. For more than four hours, 4 to 8 o'clock, traffic was completely jammed from Bear Mountain Bridge to West Point, and military police worked feverishly routing thousands of cars into parking fields.

After a day of brilliant sunshine nature developed a sullen mood toward parade time and sent, not enough rain to justify calling off the event but sufficient drizzle from time to time to ruin pressed uniforms, filmy gowns and tempers among the Cadet Corps and the audience of thousands.

At a solemn interval during parade a press photographer threw the crowd into momentary jitters when his flashlight bulb exploded like a small bomb.

War Talk Varies

War talk here varies with the groups. Among the graduation class there is little of it, and that solemn. The other classes, with undergraduate enthusiasm, know the regular Army is to be increased, hope they can be graduated at once without additional studies and classes. In the barracks, the "old grads," here for reunion, fought many wars, past, present and future, with great vigor and decisiveness.

The day's events officially began at 8 a. m., with a military mass and baccalaureate sermon at the Catholic Chapel. Bishop John F. O'Hara, former president of Notre Dame, delivered the sermon. He stressed the likeness of the military vocation to that of the religious, and reminded them that a nation has the absolute right to help its own people, but with due respect for the rights of other nations.

Cadet Chapel at 11 o'clock was the scene of a service and baccalaureate sermon to the graduation class. The Rev. H. Fairfield Butt 3d, cadet chaplain, charged the class to remember to synchronize religion and science in working for the development of a better world in which to live.

Also during the morning there were baccalaureate services in the cadet gymnasium for the 31 Jewish members of this year's graduation class, the first time such a service has been held. An organ recital in the afternoon followed a dedication at the Cadet Chapel of memorial class windows and organ stops.

3 Washingtonians Honored

Cadet Harold C. Brown, as No. 1 graduate, and the cadet having highest standing in general order of merit for four years, received two awards, the Francis Vinton Greene Memorial saber, presented by Mrs. Greene as a memorial to Gen. Greene, and a set of field the ladies auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Cadet Allen E. Gee, son of Col. Cleveland C. Gee, formerly of Washington and now stationed at Golden, Colo., received honors as second highest in the class of 450 men. He was presented the George Washington saber, gift of the National Society, D. A. R., for highest rating in natural and experimental philosophy, and a set of books from the ladies' auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars for the highest rating in military and civil engineering and military history.

Two Washingtonians were among the 28 honorees—Cadets Earl McFarland and Robert W. Strong. A distinguished cadet is McFarland, son of the assistant chief of ordnance, Brig. Gen Earl McFarland and Mrs. McFarland. Strong, son of Col. and Mrs. R. W. Strong, was awarded a saber from the Republic of Ecuador as cadet captain and regimental adjutant. The saber was presented by Ecuadorean Ambassador Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, himself a 1913 graduate of the U. S. M. A. Two of Alfaro's sons, Jaime and Eloy, jr., were graduated from West Pint last year, and a third Almedo, is now a cadet.

Virginia Legion Hears of Guards On Fifth Column

Lynchburg, Va., June 9 (AP).—The American Legion in Virginia already has taken steps to watch over and prevent subversive and "fifth-column" activities in this State, E. Ralph James, of Hampton, State commander, and in an address which featured the closing session of the Sixth District Legion Conference here today.

Declaring the United States is the last stand of democracy, James said the Virginia Legion is acting quietly and without an attempt at publicity to forestall attempts to disrupt the American way of living by subversive forces.

In describing the action being taken he said that information regarding subversive activity was forwarded to departmental headquarters and then turned over to the FBI for action.

Virginia Preacher Hangs Himself

Floyd, Va., June 9 (AP).—The Rev. Elijah Hestor, 81-year-old retired Primitive Baptist preacher, was found hanged in an outbuilding at his home in the Falling Branch vicinity, 3 miles west of here, it was reported by Sheriff Ore Williams.

Sheriff Williams said Dr. J. M. Harman, Floyd County coroner, returned a verdict of suicide by hanging.

A native of Carroll County, but a resident of Floyd for half a century, the Rev. Mr. Hestor had been in poor health since he was trampled by a horse some time ago.

He is survived by his second wife and seven children.

Funeral services were conducted today.

U. S. Bomber Sold to Allies Nearly Crashes

Six Craft Take Off At Buffalo, First Of 'Surplus' Ships

By the Associated Press

Buffalo, N. Y., June 9.—A forced landing and adroit maneuvering which avoided a collision marked the take-off from Buffalo airport today of six United States Navy bombers destined for the Allies.

One of the six departing planes failed to gain altitude and came down near the administration building shortly after it left the ground.

The pilot of a loaded American Airlines transport plane also preparing to take-off quickly swerved off the concrete runway to get out of the bomber's way.

Officials declined comment as to the reason for the forced landing. The bomber again took to the air after a few seconds' work by the mechanics.

The transport plane took off without further incident.

Another of the bombers became bogged in a soft place in the field caused by last night's heavy rain and had to be hauled out by a truck before taking to the air.

Otherwise the departure of the planes, first of 50 surplus ships turned back by the Navy Department to the manufacturers for release to the Allies, proceeded according to schedule.

A reliable informant said the first stop for refueling would be made at Boston. The ships are expected to proceed to Houlton, Me., on the New Brunswick border, across which they will be hauled for delivery to the Canadian government.

Since their concentration at Buffalo Airport Thursday night, the ships have been camouflaged and their United States Navy armament replaced by French machine guns.

An officer in the Naval Reserve said he hoped to send off 20 more planes tomorrow and have the complete consignment away by Wednesday.

He explained the forced landing, saying that the pilot "inadvertently opened his aileron flaps, which acted as a brake, so, naturally, he could not gain altitude."

The subpenas call for numerous documents relating to the production, distribution and sale of drugs, medicinal preparations, surgical instruments, equipment, supplies, all other diagnostic or therapeutic apparatus, cosmetics and toilet goods during the period from January 1, 1935, to the present.

D.C. Parochial Schools Aid Mercy Drive

Institutions Join Red Cross Campaign To Help War Victims

District parochial schools will join hands with public schools in raising funds for relief of children in ravaged Europe, the District Chapter, American Red Cross, announced yesterday.

At the request of Archbishop Curley, Msgr. Lawrence J. Shehan, director of Catholic Charities, has notified Catholic schools here of the campaign, which is part of the Red Cross war relief drive, though all funds from schools will go to relieve suffering of children. The District Board of Education last week authorized solicitation of funds for the cause in public schools.

Announcing collections toward the District's quota of $300,000 in the national $20,000,000 goal had reached $187,882.19, Red Cross officials said an appeal from Paris urgently asked immediate shipments of necessities rapidly dwindling in France. These, they said, include blankets, bed sacks, shoes, socks, underwear, dresses, towels, unbleached muslin, laundry soap, canned milk, chocolate and cocoa.

Most such supplies, said Chairman Norman H. Davis, would be shipped immediately to New York to be loaded on the mercy ship McKeesport, which is scheduled to sail this week-end for Bordeaux.

In support of the local caimpaign, the Marquess of Lothian, British Ambassador to the United States, will discuss the war and the work of the Red Cross in an interview over Station WJSV tonight at 10:15. Tomorrow at 4:30 p. m., the Chamber Music Guild will present its quartet in concert at the Raleigh Hotel for benefit of the campaign. The quartet consists of Frank Gittelman and Alexander Levin, violinists; Benjamin Sosner, viola, and Marcel Ancher, violoncello.

Gifts announced by the local chapter yesterday included the War Department, $677.10; Department of Agriculture, $1,086.57; Maritime Commission, $219; Civil Aeronautics Authority, $472.08; Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., $170; United Mine Workers, $68.50; Langley Junior High School, $42.45; Takoma Park, D. Two Women Nominate Mates For 'Ideal Father' Honors

Letters Exceed All Expectations In Volume and Fervor; Wednesday Is Last Day for Mailing Entries

And still they come, on fancy stationery and pulpy note paper, meticulously typewritten and laboriously scrawled, some couched in the best English and others bristling with slang, but all directed to the same purpose:

To prove that the writers' respective dads are the best of them all.

Just to give Father's Day an extra fillip this year, The Post decided to invite its readers to tell us about their dads, whether their own or someone else's. The response, both in volume and fervor, has exceeded all expectations.

Mrs. William Dickson, of Alexandria, in the letter nominating her husband for "ideal father" honors, said she thought the contest is a pretty grand idea.

"So often mothers get all the attention along about May 12 and I, as a mother, am just as proud as any mother to get a remembrance, however small, but I wonder if Daddy, too, doesn't deserve an outward demonstration of love and appreciation," she wrote.

Another dad whose name is advanced by his wife is August F. Fiedler, of 1933 S street southeast, because "he is an ideal father to our four sons."

"He spends Saturdays working and playing with them, teaching them and generally being a companion," she wrote. "On Sunday he takes his family to Sunday school and church. I believe that about anyone at the Metropolitan Baptist Church will agree that Mr. Fiedler is an ideal father to his children. Many have expressed that opinion."

Wednesday is the last day for mailing nominations to the Father's Day editor. The name of the winning entry will be announced in Friday's editions of The Post, along with an amply illustrated story about Washington's ideal father.

PATRICIA ENGLISH, noted lion trainer

RIGHT YOU ARE, Patricia English. Camels are more than mild. They give you the natural mildness of costlier tobaccos—plus the extra mildness of a slower way of burning which means freedom from the irritating qualities of excess heat. And along with extra mildness, extra coolness, and extra flavor, Camels also give you extra smoking (see below).

In recent laboratory tests, CAMELS burned 25% slower than the average of the 15 other of the largest-selling brands tested—slower than any of them. That means, on the average, a smoking plus equal to

Italian Troops Guard American Embassy In Rome Against Demonstration Threat

Victory by Nazis Likely to Be Signal For Entry Into War

By the Associated Press

Rome (Monday), June 10.—Pickets of troops were posted around the United States Embassy late Sunday night, presumably to guard it against demonstrations, although none occurred.

Small groups of pickets and blackshirt soldiers in steel helmets and war kits occupied strategic points with reserves in nearby doorways. The troops numbered at least 100.

They remained on duty until past midnight.

Although the British and French embassies and consulates have been guarded by troops intermittently for weeks, this was the first time they were posted at the American Embassy and consulate, which are in adjacent buildings with the consulate facing Rome's main street, Via Vittorio Veneto.

(In Washington the State Department had no direct word from Rome and officials were unable to assign a reason for the action.)

Await Nazi Victory

A smashing German victory in the Battle of France will be the signal for Italy's entry into the war, it was indicated yesterday by Giovanni Ansaldofi editor of Foreign Minister Ciano's newspaper, Il Telegrafo of Leghorn.

But the exact time the Italian legions will march was "still Mussolini's secret," Ansaldo declared in his regular weekly broadcast to Italy's armed forces.

"But we can say," he added, "that in the second period of the war, of which the battle for France is only the introduction, the fight for England will begin when France has bee neliminated. Then Italy's action will have capital importance.

"In that moment Italy with complete unity will break the bolts imprisoning her in the Mediterranean."

May Strike In Africa

Ansaldo's broadcast indicated the first Italian attack might be made in North Africa by the army of the south under its new leader, Marshal Emilio de Bono.

The editor praised the apparent success of the new German offensive in France and said the French hopes that the "Weygand Line" would be able to stem the enemy and produce another "Miracle of the Marne" had been dashed.

"One fact above all others must rankle in the minds of the French—England abandoned France to her fate," Ansaldo said. "She was quite prepared to see France overrun by Germans rather than let her have one man, one machine-gun or one wheel on an armored car for her defense."

(British troops and the Royal Air Force are fighting side by side with the French.)

Liner Halted

"In view of all these facts," the editor said, "it will therefore be unlikely that France will be able to offer prolonged resistance."

Well-informed sources expected the decisive day of Italian entry would be in the coming week. Some thought it would be as early as today but the most reliable information was that the order would come on Thursday or Friday.

An Italian dispatch from Madrid, Spain, said the Italian liner Vulcania, 24,000 tons, had been halted by a British warship and forced to enter the harbor at Gibraltar. The ship was bringing Italian inhabitants from Tangiers, French Morocco, back to Italy.

New reports from Lucia Pietromarchi, director of economic warfare, to Premier Mussolini disclosed that the Italian-British quest for a compromise settlement of the contraband control dispute failed because Italy refused to accept the British proposal for import quotas.

The quota system, which presumably would have limited Italian imports to bare domestic requirements, was the British counter proposal after the Italians submitted a four-point plan for modification of the contraband control.

Would Curb Reserves

Such a system, the reports said, would have prevented Italy from creating reserves, placed a check on war preparations and afforded the British valuable information on Italy's foreign sources of supply.

Trucks, loaded with fully equipped troops, rumbled frequently across Rome today. Army officers worked throughout the day, requisitioning horses. Travelers reported troops on the move in many parts of Italy.

Italian children continued to return to Italy from various Mediterranean areas likely to become theaters of war. Twelve hundred arrived at Bari from Cyrenaica in western Libya. Others came from Cairo and Istanbul.

The newspapers still published tales of alleged French "persecutions" in Tunisia and Morocco.

The Italian railways announced a 70 per cent reduction in train fares for families leaving Turin for places in the country to facilitate removal of people from the city.

Turin is likely to be a primary target for air raiders in the event of war, because of its proximity to the French frontier and the large number of important industries there.

Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, June 9 (AP).—Two Italian freighters, the Penelope and Carolina, which were loading lumber destined from Lybia and Sarona, respectively, received telegraphic orders today to sail immediately for the nearest Italian port.

Yugoslav circles were puzzled and frightened by the orders which indicated to some that Italy might have designs on the Dalmatian coast facing Italy across the Adriatic.

Await Canal Papers

Cairo, June 9 (AP).—Two Italian ships waited today at Port Said for papers to enter the Suez Canal. A third originally due at Suez tomorrow was believed to have returned to Massawa.

Stringent precautions were taken yesterday when four Italian ships went through the canal. They were followed the whole day through by tugs carrying armed guards.

Antisabotage measures also were taken by important oil refineries whose camouflaged tanks dot the shores of Suez Bay.

In the past two months almost every homeward-bound Italian steamer has carried dozens of motor trucks, often lashed to the decks. These trucks originally were shipped to East Africa for the Ethiopian campaign of 1935.

pronged attack on Paris from the west, east and north.

The drive from the north had petered out early yesterday because of the Germans' great losses and setbacks, the high command reported, but last night the Germans in the Soissons area had gathered fresh strength and threw themselves forward into a battle toward Chateau-Thierry and Belleau Wood, where Americans fought in the World War.

The Germans apparently were using all they had, 1,500,000 troops and several more mechanized divisions, in an attempt to crack the stubborn defenses of France.

[The New York Times military correspondent in Paris said the German divisions were disposed as follows: 40 to 45 between the Channel and the Oise River; 10 in the center around Soissons, and 40 to 45 in the Argonne. These figures, he said, do not include eight or nine armored divisions. On the opening day of the battle, Wednesday, Hitler used only 40 divisions, he said.]

Meanwhile, the Paris region was subjected to repeated bombings yesterday, and this morning antiaircraft fire was heard plainly in the city, accompanied by exploding bombs.

"Scouting detachments" of German Panzer units on the left wing of the French reached Rouen and Pont de l'Arche on the Siene, the high command acknowledged. There, it was said," they "tried vainly to cross the Seine."

These armored units—previously reported to number 200 tanks—pushed from the region of Forges-Les-Eaux and Argueill southward toward the region of Rouen and Gisors.

Rouen, on the Seine, lies about 65 miles northwest of Paris. Pont de l'Arche, a point of crossing over the meandering river, is about 8 miles south of Rouen. Gisors is on a tributary of the Seine, not the Seine itself.

French Counterattack

While the advance detachments thus forced their way into the Seine Valley avenue to Paris from the northwest, other forces were said by a war ministry spokesman to have driven to points within 30 and 40 miles of the French capital on the north.

German forces were said to have pushed south from Montdidier to a point east of Beauvais.

Beauvais lies about 40 airline miles north northwest of the Paris fringe—49 miles by road—and German penetration south of Montdidier and east of Beauvais would represent attainment of positions within the 30 to 40-mile zone north of Paris.

East of the Paris-pointed thrust, the French were reported in strong counterattacks in the Tardenois sector, between the Aisne and Marne.

French lines still further east, in the Argonne Forest were reported holding and counterattacks were said to have been launched against the Germans. The Argonne—scene of World War slaughter—lies between Rheims and Verdun.

It was acknowledged to be the crucial hour of France's fight for life—the French were buoyed up by the hope that the Germans could not long keep up their redoubled pace, that the Nazi war machine would slow down in the murderous maelstrom of aerial and land bombardment, clashing tanks and armored cars and the collision of masses of men.

". . . Between Montdidier and Noyon," the nightly communique said, "the enemy was much less persistent than yesterday. It appeared, in fact, according to the numerous statements of prisoners, that in this region they suffered yesterday afternoon a serious setback and considerable losses.

"It was the same this morning between the Oise at Noyon and the Aisne at Soissons. There also one of the enemy armies was sorely tried. It was only early this afternoon that they resumed their offensive after throwing south of the Aisne, near Soissons, new divisions supported by new armored units.

"Late this afternoon an attack was also under way in the region of Pont Avert."

Still further east the French were said to have checked a dawn attack in Champagne, between Chateau Porcien and the Argonne.

"The enemy was able to cross the Aisne only at two points where they were counterattacked."

Pursuit and bombing planes from the French side sought to dam the German mechanized tide. They were met by German fighter planes and fierce antiaircraft fire.

Nevertheless, said the high command communique, "war reconnaissances effected this morning showed several columns were sorely tried and left important material on the spot."

The high command paid a tribute to the resistance of the Poilus:

"Despite their fatigue, despite their numerical inferiority, our troops are continuing to fight with ardor and heroism."

According to an official French estimate more than a thousand of the German's rolling fortresses had been blasted into crumpled, sooty hulks of metal in the first four days of the offensive against France. Today was the fifth day of the offensive and it was marked by a doubling of the German effort.

The Nazis literally set the whole front ablaze from the sea to near Montmedy, a battle line about 160 miles long across northern France from the English Channel to the hinge with the Maginot Line.

Today's new assaults came in the Chesne region, about 120 miles northeast of the capital.

The main attack was over a 30-mile-long sector westward from Chesne-Populeux, the eastern terminus of the active front, to Chateau Procien.

Chesne-Populeux is 20 miles south of Sedan and 35 miles northwest of the World War battlefield of Verdun.

Seven armored divisions were sent across by the Germans as the spearhead of their shock forces.

It was said to have been the greatest use of mechanized material since the start of the Nazi blitzkrieg—therefore, the greatest in history.

Although the French admittedly had fallen back at several places, there was no report of a serious break-through.

The morning communique made no mention of the tide of battle, but a War Ministry spokesman said Sunday was the "crucial day."

He estimated that in the tremendous assaults on the French right wing, the Germans were using 40 divisions of infantry in the 30-mile Chateau Porcein-Chesne sector alone.

The Germans increased the bombardment with which, for three days, they had pounded the French positions—another parallel to World War methods when fixed positions frequently underwent long, heavy artillery preparation before an attack began.

The shelling lasted four hours—then the infantry came over in masses.

Another 40 divisions were said to be continuing the mass attack south of Amiens with full fury. French reports said that in the opening days of the battle on that part of the Somme River front the Germans had suffered such severe losses that they had to withdraw the remnants of seven full divisions.

The French declare that these divisions—105,000 men at full strength—virtually were cut to pieces.

Determined to force through, nevertheless, they said, Hitler threw 20 new divisions into the area, giving him a total of 40 on that front alone.

The Germans also poured ten fresh divisions into the Soissons sector, where they succeeded Saturday in crossing to the south bank of the Aisne River on both sides of the town, the spokesman said.

Behind the lines, two new decrees were promulgated to strengthen the capital's security.

All foreigners, except Britons, were ordered to hand over all firearms to police within 24 hours.

The public works ministry was empowered to ration electricity if necessary, and the populace was urged voluntarily to conserve power for war industries.

30 Reported Hurt In Pennsy Wreck In New Jersey

Allenwood, N. J., June 9 (U.P.).—A washout in the roadbed wrecked a Pennsylvania Railroad train between here and Farmingdale tonight, reportedly injuring 30 persons.

The train was bound from Asbury Park, N. J., to Philadelphia, according to State police, over a Pennsylvania spur line which extends to Trenton and the shore.

The number of cars in the train was not known immediately.

Norse War Ends As Allies Leave

in possession of Narvik and the rest of the north.

Boon to Sweden

The correspondent said it was understood that a front, or border, would be established somewhere south of Narvik.

An end to the fighting would be a special boon to Sweden. Fighting in recent days has been within six miles of her border, and fighting planes frequently have crossed the border there, involving Sweden's neutrality.

A Norwegian peace, Swedes said, might mean the return of general peace in Scandinavia, with the northern countries retaining their present status until their fate is decided by the fighting on the Western Front.

One important question not immediately answerable was whether Sweden would try to use the port of Narvik for ore exports which both England and Germany buy in normal times.

Berlin, (Monday), June 10.—The reported cessation of hostilities in Norway was unannounced in Berlin up to 3:15 a. m. (9:15 p. m. Eastern standard time Sunday) today, but the official news agency brought news dispatches from Stockholm concerning the flight of King Haakon from the country.

These dispatches said the "remnants" of French and British expeditionary forces were leaving Norway and that King Haakon had departed, presumably for Britain.

"It seems the Norwegian phase of the war is drawing to a close," said informed quarters, who added that the "report is of such importance that an official German statement must be awaited before comment can be made."

Paris Radio May Leave Air

New York, June 9 (AP).—"I don't know how many more radio broadcasts can be made from the Paris studio," said Eric Sevareid, C. B. S. correspondent, in a broadcast from Paris tonight.

"American banks in Paris today notified renters of safe deposit vaults that if the French banks leave Paris, they would follow them."

Lines of trucks were carrying away valuable papers and files of important ministries in Paris last night, Sevareid said, but the minister of information told him "he still expected to see us many times in the future in his present office."

tact on June 8 between British and German forces in northern waters.

"No further statement can be made until full reports are received."

The German high command report of having sunk or forced aground the Brtish aircraft carrier Glorious was described by a naval source as "not surprising."

"The Glorious was one of the few British aircraft carriers the Germans had not claimed as sunk before," this source said, "and in makclaims it is not surprising that they picked on this ship.

"The new German lie doubtless is being spread to encourage the people for the disappointments, setbacks and huge losses they suffered during the past week."

Germans Surge Forward, Armies 35 Miles From Paris

armies. South of the Somme, the Germans say they battled their way across the Aisne on both sides of Soissons. The latter city, it would appear, has not yet been taken, but apparently is flanked on both sides.

Informed circles today suggested that the German forces have advanced farther than indicated by the high command communique.

Say Weygand Failed

Paris, they declare, will be reached within a very few days. They repeat moreover, that the German high command is releasing specific information relative to its army's progress in any particular sector only when success in that sector is definitely assured.

The German air force saw its greatest action south of the Somme. In this sector, the Germans declare, enemy artillery and antiaircraft positions as well as "columns" of all kinds were bombed, as were enemy troops and tank concentrations.

Farther to the east, the Germans declare, "our divisions are pursuing the enemy."

In today's communique the Germans profess to see failure in Gen. Maxime Weygand's alleged tactics to force the Reich's forces to abandon the war of "movement" and adopt the static tactics of the World War. Gen. Weygand, it is said here, hoped to be able to make the Germans fight his kind of a war which, they add, "was perhaps modern in 1914 but is not so any longer."

Flanders, the Germans say, was but a preliminary decision, and add that the military decision of this war will be determined in France.

The time has now come, they add, to force it. This evidently is also the opinion of the high command. For the latter has announced that since "early this morning further portions of the German front in France took up the attack."

The Germans are attacking all the way from the Channel to their border in order, it is said here, to prevent Gen. Weygand from further developing and strengthening his defense positions between the line of their farthest advance and Paris, by forcing him to fight on a wide front. And fighting on a wide front, the Germans say, with their alleged superiority in modern weapons, in the air, and in motorized units, is just what they like to do.

Every advance which their extreme right, which has almost reached the lower Seine somewhere near Rouen, makes, they add, necessarily means an increase in the length of the front and decreases the possibility of any concentration of enemy forces. In this sort of "open field" warfare, the Germans declare, their method of attack excels.

Bomb Airfields

That the immediate goal of the present German operations is Paris is indicated by the attacks which the German planes carried through yesterday. For in addition to "successfully" bombing the Harbor of Cherbourg, they rained high powered explosives on French airfields north and southeast of Paris as well as highways and railway rights of way northwest of the French capital.

In these attacks the Germans say 9 of their planes are "missing" while 58 enemy planes and 1 captive balloon were destroyed; 39 in the air, 13 through antiaircraft artillery, and the rest on the ground.

Paris was ominously warned by the press, moreover, that the erecting of barricades within the city and the offering of resistance to the invader can invite for the city the fate of which Warsaw, and it might be added, Rotterdam, were inglorious examples. The German thesis is that any city which offers resistance, whether forts are about it or not, invites destruction.

Dewey Silent About Parley With McNary

Candidate Dodges Questions During Brief Stay Here

Thomas E. Dewey, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, ate breakfast here yesterday with Senator Charles L. McNary (Republican), of Oregon, then took a train to New York.

What they said Dewey did not tell, and McNary could not be reached.

Dewey, however, did believe his chances for the nomination to be "excellent," and he did observe that the "people are concerned over the failure of the Administration to make more progress toward national defense."

He avoided questions, saying he had not anticipated being called on for statements in his brief stopover here. Asked about the move by former President Hoover's friends in Palo Alto, Calif., to have Hoover drafted for the Republican nomination, Dewey said he had not read the reports.

He came here from North Carolina, where he spoke Saturday in Greensboro and Winston-Salem. With his party, consisting of several campaign assistants, Dewey left for New York in the late afternoon.

Saboteur Tries To Sink Enshrined U. S. Battleship

Portland, Oreg., June 9 (AP)—Someone attempted to sink the 44-year-old battleship Oregon, veteran of the Spanish-American War, last night. The ship is enshrined in a Marine Park here.

By the time custodians discovered an open seacock in the port shaft alley today, the ship had taken in 600 tons of water and settled 24 inches by the stern.

Mayor Joseph K. Carson ordered an investigation after being assured by Thomas V. Prideaux, assistant custodian, that the apparent saboteur must have been thoroughly familiar with warships.

To reach the 10-inch valve which was opened, one had to force two tightly locked bulkhead doors and loosen a valve screw with heavy wrenches.

The ship was historically famous for its dash around the Horn to join the Atlantic Fleet for the Battle of Santiago.

he would urge President Roosevelt to send immediately 2,000 first-line American war planes to the Allies.

Representative Van Zandt (Republican), of Pennsylvania, urged dismissal from Government service of 563 employes described by the Dies committee as members of the American League for Peace and Democracy, which the committee termed a "Communist-front" organization.

Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, member of the Dies committee, declared "the Fifth Column in the United States has flourished under the New Deal" and "the surest way of removing the Fifth Column from our shores is to remove the New Deal from the seat of Government."

On the other hand, Edwin S. Smith, member of the NLRB, declared that a "drive to identify American labor with a Fifth Column" had been instituted by vigorous opponents of progressive legislation for labor.

Legislation to lift the present limit on the number of Army planes and to authorize use by the President of $132,000,000 for emergency defense purposes was scheduled for Senate consideration today.

Behind it, the Senate faces the $1,073,548,918 relief bill for the coming fiscal year, expected to meet quick approval, though Senator Byrd has forecast an additional $506,000,000 will be asked in January.

The enlarged Army appropriations bill, carrying $1,500,024,888 in cash and $323,229,636 in contract authorizations, was listed to come before the House today.

The House tomorrow is scheduled to take up an emergency defense bill providing $1,312,000,000 for the Army, Navy, FBI, Civil Aeronautics Authority and other agencies, involved in the defense program.

May's committee will consider the request from President Roosevelt for authority to trade in surplus guns to the manufacturers, who might then sell them to the Allies.

The same group also is to take action on the White House request for power to order out the National Guard when Congress is not in session to vote the required declaration of emergency.

Vandenberg, long listed as an "isolationist" in the Senate, said Americans may still be "insulationists" but no longer "isolationists." The transition here, he said, flows soundly "from the clear conception that America is safer if the Allies win; and it has real substance in the necessities which might confront us under the Monroe Doctrine if the Allies do lose."

Citing the pending Congressional declaration that no foreign conquest shall be permitted in this hemisphere, he said "there is but one belligerent to whom it could apply," and added:

"At this point we fight."

However, the Michigan Senator declared that "America is not automatically lost if the Allies lose," contending that "our interests are not that inseverable."

Recognizing that the United States has "a definite and specific take" in an Allied victory, the Senator raised a question whether the course being pursued by the Administration in aiding Great Britain and France did not point toward a situation in which the country could be forced into the war. He said:

"If, as a result of what may be construed, under international law, as direct intervention by our Government, Germany should declare war on us, we would be at war regardless of our own intentions to the contrary."

He cited article 6 of the Hague convention which he said "binds us to the following doctrine: 'The supply, in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power, of warships, ammunition or war materials of any kind whatever is forbidden.'"

Declaring the "new technique" for the Nation's defense is "about 95 per cent a matter of industrial mass production," he said the President had appointed on the advisory defense commisison "the best mass production expert in America" (William S. Knudsen) and urged that he be given "freedom of action and authority."

Vandenberg urged a new commercial and political treaty with Japan, "if reasonably possible," to stabilize conditions in the Far East.

A fiscal "crisis is obvious," he asserted, as he recommended a 10 per cent reduction in all appropriations save those for defense and fixed charges, and a 10 per cent reduction in all Federal salaries above $3,000.

"New taxes to pay our new bills" also were favored as he hit what he called the inadequacy of the emergency tax bill intended to raise slightly more than $1,000,000,000 a year.

R. A. F. Blasts Nazi Munitions In Ardennes

England Moving 120,000 Children To Safer Areas

By the Associated Press

London, June 9.—Wide-ranging British bombers blew up hidden German ammunition dumps in the Ardennes Mountains, set fire to Nazi oil tanks in Belgium, and bombed and machine-gunned enemy troops behind the front, the Air Ministry reported tonight.

At the same time, the Health Ministry said the beginning of German bombing in England make it imperative to move 120,000 children from Greater London to safer areas in the west, principally in Cornwall, Devonshire, Somerset and Wales. The mass transfer will begin Thursday.

In the last three weeks more than 50,000 children have been moved from the east coast to safer localities.

The air raids and attacks on German troops, carried out yesterday and last night, spread "destruction and chaos" behind the enemy lines, the ministry reported.

The British said 17 German aircraft were shot down by their fighters, while six British aircraft are missing.

Some of the bombers were said to have penetrated as far into western Germany as Rhenish Prussia and the Ruhr Valley.

In one air fight eight Royal Air Force Hurricane fighters were reported to have tackled 20 Heinkel bombers and their 10 Messerschmitt escorts over the battle zone. The Hurricanes shot down six bombers and one fighter plane. Two hurricanes were missing.

Amplifying the report of the raid on the Nazi oil stores—at Ghent—the air ministry said "scores of heavy bombs" were dropped on oil tanks which blazed fiercely and sent up clouds of black smoke.

The flames revealed five railroad lines, two filled with cars.

Spread Chaos

Giving details of the raids on communication lines, the ministry said:

"Enemy transport columns were scattered and flung into confusion. Lines of tanks were heavily bombed and armored cars and motor lorries were reduced to twisted wreckage from direct hits.

"Troops on the march were machine-gunned, antiaircraft guns were attacked and silenced and a gasoline dump hidden in a wood was blown up."

Bombers ranging over the right wing of the German front in the region of the Bresle and Somme rivers "spread destruction and chaos at many points behind the enemy line."

The ministry told of a direct hit on a column of German automobiles and troops between Amiens and Aumale, where "one of the aircraft took advantage of the ensuing confusion to bring its machine gun into play against a mass of vehicles."

Another hit on a column of trucks a few miles north of Poix, in the Aumale region, was reported along with the bombing of a road and a railway crossing southeast of the town.

German Cavalry Stampeded

South of Namps au Val, the report said, German cavalry "stampeded at the approach of British aircraft and men and horses ran in all directions."

Gasoline storage tanks in the woods north of Abbeville were attacked with nearly 100 incendiary bombs. They blew up with "a tremendous roar," spreading "a raging mass of flames" through the woods.

Abbeville was raided twice by heavy bombers, who were credited with a direct hit on the main railway bridge and apparent hits on an ammunition store.

In Germany, marshalling yards near Essen, Duren and Euskirchen were raided and fires were reported started on several targets.

Soviet, Japan Reach Accord In Far East

Siberia Dispute Ended; Rome and Moscow Envoys Go to Posts

By the Associated Press

Moscow, June 9.—Soviet Russia, suddenly the center of renewed diplomatic attentions from three European nations, patched up her Far Eastern fences tonight by an agreement with Japan on the Manchoukuo-Outer Mongolia boundary dispute which has produced several years of intermittent fighting.

An official announcement at midnight said Russia and Japan had agreed on the exact frontiers in the area where fighting between their armies took place last year—presumably Nomonhan on the Outer Mongolian-Manchoukuo border. There was no further inkling on how the Russians and Japanese agreed on the boundary argument.

Meanwhile, it was announced officially that Ambassador Nicolai Gorelchin, who left Rome last December without even presenting his credentials would resume his post as Ambassador to Italy and the Italian Ambassador to Moscow, Dr. Augusto Rosso, would return to Moscow.

Both Envoys on Way

Dr. Rosso was said to be en route from Rome and Gorelchin is leaving Moscow for Rome. The Russian Ambassador was recalled suddenly when Italians demonstrated in Rome against Russia at the outbreak of the Russian-Finnish war. Dr. Rosso was called back to Italy early in January, presumably because of the Russian recall of Gorelchin.

Also en route to Moscow are two newly-named ambassadors from the Allies—Sir Stafford Cripps, of Great Britain, and Eric Labonne, of France.

(In London diplomatic circles advanced the possibility that Josef Stalin is maneuvering for a new axis bargain. They also expressed belief that Sir Stafford might be able to make progress toward an agreement with Stalin if the Russian dictator is sufficiently concerned over German successes.)

Russia and Japan reached an armistice last September on their border clashes, and several weeks later named a commission to settle the boundaries. The Japanese announced on January 31, however, that the commission had disbanded in utter disagreement.

The agreement was reached by Premier Molotoff, and the Japanese Ambassador to Russia, Shigenori Togo.

Comment on the possible entry of the United States into the European war was made by Pravda, Communist Party newspaper, which declared that such a move by the United States would constitute "a serious menace to the Pacific possessions" of that country.

Pravda said American participation in the European war would "inevitably mean the concentration of the whole Navy in the Atlantic." It added that Japanese "imperialism will not fail to enjoy such a favorable opportunity for strengthening its positions in the Dutch Indies.

"Also it is not to be excluded that in the Philippines it will act at the expense of the United States."

See Move for New Axis

London, June 9 (AP).—The possibility that Joseph Stalin is maneuvering for a new axis bargain was seen today in London diplomatic circles.

Commentators stressed reports that Russia is making further military preparations from the Baltic to the Black Sea, and is taking extensive security measures involving new naval bases, fortifications, air raid precautions and plans for removing civilians.

Informed sources expressed the opinion that these steps could mean only that Stalin entertains an acute distrust of the intentions of the Rome-Berlin axis or desires to create that impression.

One source said with obvious conviction that this attitude already has produced a quiet offer to divide Europe into three zones of influence and neutralize the Straits of the Dardanelles, now controlled by Turkey.

The zones, it was said, would be as follows: Baltic and Black Sea regions to Russia, Adriatic and Mediterranean regions to Italy, northern and central Europe to Germany.

French Envoy to Moscow

La Bonne will join Sir Stafford Cripps, new British ambassador to Russia, at Sofia.

The visit of the French ambassador coincided with expressions in official quarters and the press that Turkey expected Russia's moral support at least if she joined the Allies following Italy's entry into the war.

'Battle in Last Quarter-Hour,' Says Weygand 'Hold Fast' Plea

Allied Generalissimo Sees Crisis in Nazis' Great Push at Hand; French Selling Ground to Foes at Enormous Cost

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, June 9.—At 10 o'clock this morning, one hour after the German infantry had attacked in the Argonne, Gen. Maxime Weygand issued the following general order to all troops:

"The German offensive is now launched on the whole front, from the sea to Montmedy. Tomorrow it will extend as far as Switzerland. The order still is for each man to fight without tnought of falling back, eyes fixed right ahead, in the place where the high command has placed him.

"The commander in chief knows full well the efforts and the valor of which the armies engaged, as well as the air force, are giving—a magnificent example without cessation.

"He thanks them for this. France asks still more.

"Officers, noncommissioned officers and men, the salvaiton of the country calls not only for your courage, but for all the stubbornness, initiative and fighting spirit of which I know you are capable.

"The enemy has suffered considerable losses. Soon he will reach the end of his effort.

"This the last quarter-hour. Hold fast!"

Meets Foe With Fire

Paris, June 9 (AP).—An imperturbably calm little man, who seems to be here, there and evyerwhere, directed France's millions of poilus today in a "hold tight" defense against what French military sources call Adolf Hitler's "all-out" offensive.

Seventy-three-year old Generalissimo Weygand, the Allied commander in chief and veteran of many battles, was playing the only strategy left to him—he was meeting the enemy's onsalughts with murderous fire, selling ground at an enormous price, hoping that the Germans, after exerting their full effort, would find out that they could not quite make it.

French military soruces expressed belief that Hitler has thrown everything he has into the effort to take Paris.

The fact that the French lines are falling back, they say, is not necessarily alarming, so long as they do not crack.

A phrase finding favor is that the Germans "may go from victory to victory—to defeat." That is the essence of Weygand's defense: tiring the enemy out, inflicting huge losses, converting each village into a hastily fortified camp, fighting from town to town, village to village, forest to river bank.

Is Crucial Time

By "the last quarter of an hour," Weygand meant that the battle had reached a point where, if the French keep their lines intact, the Germans must quickly exhaust themselves.

A man who saw Weygand today said he was as calm as ever. He works at a modest little table in the French general headquarters between lightning visits to the fighting front, and to Paris to confer with government leaders.

He is the kind of a man who can still, in the eighth decade of his life, defer sleep, and then sleep soundly when he does sleep. He can put off eating and later eat heartily. He gets up at 7; works until late at night.

"In that man," say the people on all sides, "is vested the hope of France."

among the passengers, together with a number of students who had been studying for the priesthood in Italy. Others were wives and children of consular officials, and of American businessmen, who themselves remained abroad.

800 Greet Liner

A Red Cross ambulance, four nurses and nine other volunteers were on hand to aid those who might be without funds, and to speed children to the homes of relatives.

As the crowded ship nosed into the dock, the gay, light-hearted passengers crushed to the side of the vessel, shouting greetings to an estimated 800 friends, relatives and spectators on the pier.

Fifty alien refugees were among those aboard.

One incident created excitement, when Federal investigators boarded the vessel at Quarantine and arrested 35-year-old Howard Welsch, of Sea Cliff, N. Y., on an 8-year-old charge of violating the Federal income tax law.

In a special ship-to-shore N. B. C. broadcast, passengers told of their joy at returning and of their experiences in Europe.

Margaret Rupli, returning from Amsterdam, said the voyage home was "pretty rough."

"What a relief it is to see the Statue of Liberty after night after night of blackouts in Holland and Belgium," she added. "The trip has been marvelous. People have been sleeping in the strangest places on this voyage . . . There are rows and rows of cots in the recreation rooms . . . One man found a place to sleep under a staircase . . ."

She said the ship had passed a British convoy of 22 ships.

Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, returning from England, spoke of her husband, a son of President Theodore Roosevelt, now a British officer fighting in Norway.

"He is fighting shoulder to shoulder with the British," Mrs. Roosevelt said. "He feels it an honor. So do I."

Mrs. Robert Montgomery, wife of the motion picture star, said she spoke "for many others when I say we feel any help that the United States can give in the present situation is worth while."

She said she had left Bob in the American Field Service (a volunteer organization on the French front) to return to my children for the summer. I plan to return to London in the fall."

Bordeaux, June 9 (AP).—The United States Liner Washington, carrying 1,000 Americans fleeing the perils of the European war, sailed from Verdon yesterday. She will call at Lisbon and later at Ireland.

U. S. Investigates Credentials of All Aliens at Cancel

Panama City, June 9 (U.P.).—The United States Army is investigating the credentials of all European-born aliens working in the Canal Zone, it was learned tonight.

Authorities are not only looking into the affairs of the workers themselves but are also investigating their families and other relatives, it was learned.

It was known that high Army authorities seek to eliminate all aliens from totalitarian states who might possibly be connected with "fifth column" organizations.

The investigation was said to be centered on an approximate 2,500 employes working under Construction Quartermaster Col. Wilmot Danielson.

Reliable sources reported some 500 Germans and Austrians were working for Col. Danielson on a $60,000,000 construction project in the Canal Zone. The investigation was said to involve also thousands of British West Indians who are employed by the United States Army.

Under normal circumstances any fifth column suspects expelled from the Canal Zone would enter the Republic of Panama, which is divided by the canal. But it was understood that an arrangement has been made between the United States and Panama whereby Panama will evict all "fifth columnists" ordered out of the Canal Zone.

O'Conor Attends Cumberland Fete

Cumberland, Md., June 9.—Gov. O'Conor, returning from the Middle West, accompanied by Secretary of State Francis Petrot, stopped off here today to participate in the Flag Day exercises of the Cumberland Lodge of Elks. There was a parade to the Fort Hill High School stadium, where the Governor spoke.

The American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and Company G, Maryland National Guard, with their musical groups, joined the Elks in the celebration. Frank Hladky, of Annapolis, president of the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Association of Elks, delivered the pledge to the flag, and City Auditor Arthur B. Gibson spoke on "The History of the Flag."

Nazis Poised To Move Across Switzerland

Blow at French By Skirting Maginot Line Threatened

By the Associated Press

Bern, June 9.—Swizerland seemed in greater danger tonight than at any time since the war began.

Fresh German reserve divisions slipped quietly into the Black Forest during the night and Italy's expected entry into the conflict seemed more imminent than ever.

The statement of Gen. Maxime Weygand, Allied commander in chief, that the German offensive "will extend tomorrowas far as Switzerland," led military experts in Switzerland to say that Basel appeared in great danger.

Swiss in Danger

It was said that if the Germans' 20 divisions in the Black Forest should strike at France it was unlikely they would try a suicidal attack across the Rhine into the guns of the Maginot Line.

The logical German moves in that direction would be an attempt to outflank the Maginot Line by invading Switzerland east of Basel and then swing west into France.

The French command in Lower Alsace apparently had the same idea. French artillery tonight shelled German railroads, highways and artillery emplacements north of Basel.

In the last three weeks French shells have destroyed the German Rhine railroad south of Istein and the rail junction at Weile north of Basel. The Germans did not reply with any artillery in the Basel region, but shelled the French fort south of Strasbourg.

One of the danger signs for the Swiss was that German divisional direction signs posted on all rearguard Black Forest roads since the beginning of the war, as an indication to reserve units in the event reinforcements were necessary, were changed recently.

Previously the general direction of these signs was east to west, that is toward the Rhine and the French frontier. Now they point from north to south—toward the Swiss frontier.

400,000 Men Ready

The situation truly looked ominous for the Swiss.

But the Swiss were keeping their heads. About 400,000 troops stood ready in the Winkelried line, facing Germany, and in Alpine gorges and passes looking down on Italy.

Another 100,000 were officially on leave but their rifles and ammunition were at home with them, and they were ready to block any fifth column or parachutists, attack on the interior.

In addition to 20 divisions in the Black Forest, the Germans have eight divisions of fortress troops along the Rhine from Basel to Karlsruhe.

When the Germans invaded the Low Countries they put on a great show of strength on the Swiss border.

Stage Maneuvers

At that time German engineers practised spanning the Rhine with pontoon bridges, while motorized units dashed along the frontier near Schaffhausen Canton, and thousands of troops maneuvered daily opposite Basel—all movements easily observed from the Swiss side.

That time the concentrations were designed only to keep French divisions on the Jura Mountain frontier. Shortly afterward, German divisions sped away to Belgium. Now they are back again but this time they have kept out of sight of the Swiss frontier.

Again it is possible that Germany is merely trying to force the French to withdraw troops from the battle-front north of Paris.

If that is Germany's intention, it is failing this time, for despite Germany's record of swift and devastating invasion, the experts here believe the tough Swiss army could hold the first Rhine line then the main Limmat line, for at least five days unaided, and has little to fear from the Italians in the Alps, where dynamite can do the work of whole divisions.

The French, therefore, have maintained only a small guard on the Jura frontier.

Press Gets Orders

The Swiss press got curt orders from the army censor today to publish no comment or sensational headlines on yesterday's terse high command communique.

The communique in itself was sensational to the Swiss. It said that two more German planes had been shot down over Swiss soil. It reported that a Swiss observation plane had been shot down in flames after it was attacked by six German bombers who took a short cut over Swiss sterritory from France yesterday.

The score of planes shot down to date is eight German bombers and one German fighter; one Swiss fighter and one Swiss observation plane.

NEW MUSIC will be unreeled at both the Wardman's Metronome Room and the Ambassador's Hi Hat this week . . . Little Jack Little will arrive in the Metronome Room on Friday to succeed Reggie Childs and his rolling rhythms, recently preferred by many of our nicest people (including that flock of pretty nurses from Doctors' Hospital who were in Metronome the other night) . . . Jerry Salisbury and his Ambassadors open at the Hi Hat this afternoon. Also accordionist-singer Frank Carter who knows 150 old-time songs. Beginning today the Hi Hat musical sessions will run from 5 to 8 and 9:30 to 3 a. m. Ray Hart and his Diplomats, the lucky so-and-sos, will sail for Argentina about June 20. They have a three-month engagement to play in the Plaza Hotel in Buenos Aires.

WEDDING BELLS! Remember Maria Karson and her trio who decorated Mayfair for months last winter. Maria writes that she's wearing a new engagement ring and will probably be married around next Christmas. The lucky fellow is an amateur aviator from the Midwest . . . All this reminds us we'd better investigate those rumors about Fabyan Knight, the glamor lad of the Lyle Smith Trio at the Mayfair.

THE CHANGING PICTURE. The Fat Boy roof garden has just opened, giving the town another bright and breezy openair spot. Music by Joe Cochran's band . . . A card from Dick "Hotcha" Gardner, of the Mayflower Lounge, tells us that he's having big evenings at his new "Hotcha Club" at the Peter Pan Inn. Just follow Route 240 on the road to Frederick . . . The Flagship has closed for the summer . . . The Pall Mall Room continues open despite those false alarms about its closing. Dance music by Bert Bernath's orchestra . . . Exciting changes, both in decoration and entertainment are impending at the gay Del Rio.

GOLFING GUITARIST. Arthur Todd, of the King Cole Room, has just added another cup to his trophy collection. He got it for winning the Clifton Park tournament in Baltimore last week with a neat 72.

RUSS CULLEN, new star singer at the Rainbow Room

THIS WEEK'S SHOWS. Shoreham Terrace. A revue with continental tang. Dancers St. Clair and Day have been stepping in Paris and on the Rivera since 1937. Paris is the home town of Ballerina Vorina, though she was born in Odessa and is a graduate of the Moscow Ballet. True and Trudy Wilkins, the "golden pair," are American, but they'll soon be bound for Rio de Janeiro. Tap Dancer Kathryn Smith has appeared with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

Lotus. Tom Ball's Revue, the big and shining show that was last in Washington at Christmas, opens today with new acts and parade numbers. There'll be eight dancing pretties, the dancing Rosilianos and acrostepper Una Cooper.

Casino Royal. Amazingly cute are the new Paul Florenz Frolicettes. They do a hula in swingtime, a picture dance from "Irene" and a conga. Murray and Hale, star tap dancers, head the revue.

KITCHEN CALL. When Mr. and Mrs. Jock McLean go to the Lounge Riviera they never miss a trip to the kitchen to say hello to Chef Hardy, who used to be cook around the McLean manse when Jock was a small boy.

ROOF GARDENING. The New Glen Echo roof garden overlooks all the lights and gayety of the park. You get a hawk's-eye view of the merry-go-rounders, the airplane rides and all the rest of it. If you want to give your best girl a real treat, take her there for dinner before you dance to Paul Kain's music . . . For a place with a view, you'll never beat the new Starlight Roof. You can see down the river past Alexandria. A marvelous place for a dinner at sunset and dancing until long after the stars come out to the sleek rhythms of Arthur Herbert's band.

COMPOSER'S NIGHT is on again tomorrow night at the Neptune Room. Evelyn Tyner has a hatful of promising numbers by Washington song writers. They'll all be played and it looks like a great party.

SINGING 'EM SWEET. Matt Windsor never sang a note until Eileen George arrived in the Anchor Room. Now he's getting to be a regular Dick Powell in duets with Eileen. They go off the deep end with everything from the "Donkey's Serenade" to "Row, Row, Row" . . . If it's a sweet song you want, you'll have to go far to beat Kenny White of Bill Downey's Nightingale Orchestra. He's a microphone wizard . . . Big Tommy Suter, of the New Bavarian, has the knack of spreading song contagion. He sings about two lines and all the customers start chirping along with him.

SURE FIRE HARRINGTON. The Harrington Tavern started as a cocktail and snack headquarters. Then they started to serve breakfasts and luncheons. Just a week or so ago they began dinner service, also an immediate success. What next? We can't imagine, unless it's a smorgasbord.

DICK'S GRILL has an entirely new service setup. Snappy little waitresses have replaced the waiters and there is a new crew of expert mixers. The day manager is Minnie Corn, a busy little lady from Ca'lina.

Contract Bridge

One of the hands which helped G. R. Trimmer and L. D. Keating win the national championship was played at a three no trump contract which they defeated one trick. The major burden of the defense rests with North, who must play carefully and well to prevent the game from making.

Here are the cards and the bidding, with neither side vulnerable and South dealer:

	♠ K J 9 8 6 ♡ Q 9 8 ◇ A 6 4 ♣ 6 3
♠ A 7 2 ♡ K 6 ◇ Q J 10 7 ♣ A Q 10 7	WEST — NORTH — EAST — SOUTH	♠ Q 10 4 ♡ A 10 4 ◇ 9 5 3 ♣ K J 9 4
	♠ 5 3 ♡ J 7 5 3 2 ◇ K 8 2 ♣ 8 5 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ◇	1 ♠	1NT
Pass

Opening lead: 5 ♠.

Work out your own plan of defense before reading the Olympic solution which follows:

If East is declarer and South opens spades, North must be careful not to play the king when dummy ducks the opening lead. He must leave South with a second spade to lead when South gets in with the diamond king, which in turn must be taken before the diamond ace. If, however, South opens hearts, the contract is defeated if North is careful to take the diamond ace before the diamond king is forced out. If West is declarer, North should open spades and then let the first diamond lead run to South.

5,000 Jam British Embassy, Open to Public For First Time at 'Bundles For Britain' Tea

Turnout So Great Food Ran Short; Lord Lothian Host

By Dudley Harmon

The British Embassy broke with tradition yesterday for the sake of Britain's war-stricken seamen, and for the first time threw open its gates to the public.

The reaction was equally unprecedented. Five thousand persons paid $1 each to attend a "Bundles for Britain" benefit tea, and then settled down with their families for a pleasant hour on the lawn or in the marble-columned ballroom.

So tremendous was the turn-out that the food ran short. Scores stood patiently in line waiting to be served as Mrs. George A. Garrett, committee chairman, sent in an emergency call for more ice cream and cookies. She cleaned out one Washington caterer and then started on a hurried series of calls to bakery shops.

Shakes Hands with All

The perspiration rolling down his face, Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, stood in his august ballroom and shook hands with one and all. Elderly ladies held on to his hand and embarked on lengthy chats.

Officials of the British Embassy, which has had a reputation for snobbishness in the past, looked on and seemed bewildered by the scene.

The thousands wandered on, admiring the green swimming pool, smelling the white roses which spilled off the trellis onto the grounds, pausing to rest in garden seats. Cigarette butts were ground out on the marble parquet of the drawing room, and under the well-kept hedges were mounds of soiled paper plates. The green grass on the paths began to have a beaten-down air an hour before the party ended.

Officialdom Absent

Though official Washington was absent from the party, scores of social notables turned up to do their bit for the Empire. Miss Mabie Beardman, Red Cross secretary; Mrs. Truxton Beale, Countess Laszlo Szechenyi, Countess van der Straten Ponthon, wife of the Belgian Ambassador; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Eliot Tuckerman, of New York, and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, of Bethesda, were some of the social registitees present.

The "Bundles for Britain" committee had planned on 2,500 coming to the relief party. So had the police. When twice the number showed up to inspect the sights and do their bit to aid the British sailors, the 10 police on duty had a trying afternoon keeping traffic moving and at the same time finding parking space for the thousands who came in autos.

Thought Limit 2,000

It was just a year ago last Saturday that a smaller and far different group gathered in the sacrosanct embassy grounds to meet the visiting King and Queen of England at the party given for them by the then British Ambassador Sir Ronald Lindsay and Lady Lindsay. Then gray toppers and trailing Paris gowns predominated; yesterday it was gingham frocks and even shorts. At that time, with many clamoring for invitations, it was announced that the garden couldn't hold more than 2,000.

BUNDLES FOR BRITAIN—The British Embassy garden was thrown open to the public yesterday for the first time at a garden party for the benefit of Bundles for Britain, which collects warm clothing and other articles for the men at sea. A view of the garden with Lord Lothian, the ambassador, in foreground, is shown

Mob Storms Sect's Offices After Shooting

Jehovah Witnesses' Headquarters Burned During Maine Rioting

By the Associated Press

Kennebunk, Me., June 9.—In one of a series of mob outbreaks, a crowd of 2,000 townspeople today sacked and burned the Kennebunk headquarters of a religious sect (Jehovah's Witnesses) whose members, State Policeman George P. Beckett said, earlier shot and wounded two Kennebunk men.

One of the wounded was shot in the legs and doctors feared they might have to amputate. Six members of the sect were arrested on charges of assault with intent to kill.

While the interior of their building still smoldered, 500 men tonight stoned an apartment building in Biddeford, 10 miles away, apparently in the belief, police reported, that it was occupied by another member of the same group.

No one was hurt, although, until dispersed by police, the crowd milled about the building for an hour, frequently shouting "Salute the flag." Lights went out in the apartment soon after the crowd arrived. Two daughters of the tenant were reported inside.

Cry "Salute the Flag"

The cry of "Salute the flag" apparently was a reference to the sect's contention in cases involving New England school children that their religious principles forbade their subscribing allegiance to anything but the deity.

A similar reason apparently was behind the first of the outbreaks, which occurred last night in Sanford when fisticuffing followed the refusal of two sect members to salute the American flag. Later 50 persons raided the two men's apartment and burned their literature.

The Biddeford crowd in tonight's incident returned shortly before midnight to the scene of the stoning, but no untoward incidents occurred although some of the crowd shouted: "Tar and feather them."

Out of Town Mob

Police said they thought a large number of the crowd came to Biddeford from Kennebunk.

The most seriously wounded victim of the Kennebunk shooting, Dwight Robinson, a 22-year-old shipyard worker felled with shotgun pellets in hips and legs, was given a blood transfusion at a Biddeford hospital tonight and doctors reported his condition had improved.

Fred McDonald, the other man whose shooting touched off the mob action here, suffered leg wounds.

The mob, armed with clubs and torches, marched to the flimsy, one-story headquarters, fired it, wrecked furniture and destroyed literature of the goup.

Members of the sect, aroused by reports of mob violence against two of their group in a nearby town, barricaded themselves in the hall early in the day.

When an automobile carrying four Kennebunk men halted near the building, police said, a shotgun volley poured from the headquarters into the machine.

Robinson and McDonald were hit, but two companions escaped unharmed.

The motorists said they were returning home from a dance and had no intention of molesting the religionists. They said they were bewildered by the attack.

State police, after confiscating five rifles and two shotguns in the headquarters, arrested the sect's leader, Edwin Bobb, and five members, Benjamin Graves, of Kennebunk; Carroll S. Madsen, 28, and Joseph Leathers, 38, both of Portland; Richard Trask and Fayette Snowdale, both of Biddeford, on assault charges.

Three women members were escorted out of town under heavy police guard.

The mob action followed a frustrated attempt to storm the Kennebunk jail where members of the sect were being held.

Leathers said threats that the building would be attacked were circulated in Kennebunk a week ago.

The two men charged that "at least seven cars" had been cruising the Kennebunk streets awaiting a chance to attack the meeting house, which also served as a residence for sect members.

Await Delivery From Jail

Murfreesboro, Ark., June 9 (INS).—Four members of a religious cult, badly beaten by a mob last night at Glenwood, Ark., tonight awaited divine assistance in effecting their freedom from jail cells at Murfreesboro.

"We are witnesses of God; He commanded us to fulfill our mission and he will protect us in our troubles," a spokesman said.

The group, members of Jehovah's Witnesses, was beaten last night while distributing literature described by their assailants as "un-American," after they had refused to salute the American flag.

Beware Propaganda, Dr. Dudley Declares at Church Forum

Secretary of Senator Davis Urges 'Warm Hearts and Cool Heads;' War Crisis Theme of Other Sermons

Christian churchmen have a tremendous responsibility to keep "hearts warm" and "heads cool" in the present war emergency, Dr. Harold M. Dudley, secretary to Senator James J. Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania, said here last night.

"Those of us who participated in or lived through the great war 25 years ago know the futility of responding to one-sided propaganda in war times," he told members of the Luther Leagues and Round-table organizations at Reformation Lutheran Church, on Capitol Hill.

Warning that "we face the same sinister influence today," Dr. Dudley said we have the responsibility of searching and studying for facts and to refuse judgment until we know what we are talking about.

Praises Press

He praised the press for presenting a clearer picture of both sides story than in the last war, then said:

"Study groups in the churches for the purpose of keeping our hearts warm and our heads cool will do as much to keep America free from war as all agencies of mechanized national defense we can possibly muster.

"If we go to war, it will come because our feelings have outstripped our intelligence and because we have listened to but one kind of talk when experience has shown there are always two sides to important questions."

Never has opposition to the truth of the Gospel reached higher level than today," Dr. Alton B. Altfather, pastor of Falls Church Presbyterian Church, said last night at Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, on Capital Hill.

Discussing "The World's Zero Hour" last night at Calvary Gospel Church, 1911 H street northwest, Canadian Evangelist C. S. Tubby said:

"The whole world is on edge and many are perplexed and filled with many are perplexed and filled with tormenting fear. Many are wondering if we are nearing the end

Sees Christ's Return

Pointing out that the world is living in an extraordinary time, the speaker said that Biblical truths indicate that tremendous changes are due. Those changes will be marked by Christ's return to earth, he said, adding that "only then will there be peace and prosperity."

The world is doomed unless man soon learns how to live together harmoniously, Dr. John W. Rustin said yesterday morning from the Mount Vernon Place Methodist pulpit.

Warning that the increasing "shrinking" of the world's areas, bringing wars and other conflicts, have made isolation impossible, the clergyman insisted that "if humanity is to live at all, it must learn to live together."

Individually, he said, unless we physically and mentally, morally and spiritually, can work harmoniously within ourselves, we will "go to pieces." Those forces united bring strength, he added.

Nazis Prepared to Raid Britain

By the Associated Press

Basel, June 9.—Intensive German preparations for an attack on England with parachute and submarine troops are being completed swiftly despite the demands of the great Nazi offensive against France, informed sources declared tonight.

With the Channel ports in their hands, their parachutists resting from the Lowlands campaign and new chute reservists in training, the Germans may be ready to strike even before the "battle of France" is ended, said these sources, who included both neutrals and belligerents.

The Germans now have more than 100 submarines, it was said, almost all of which have been transformed into undersea transports for ferrying troops across the English Channel.

Move 175,000 Troops

The German plan of attack against England involves moving about 175,000 troops across the Channel in two nights and one day, reports reaching here said.

The first wave would be veteran parachutists with special equipment for landing on the Channel beaches. Their task would be to seize control of small ports and coves.

The parachute troops would receive reinforcements and supplies from submarines pending the attempt of larger craft to reach England with armored equipment, it was reported.

Recent reports present a new picture of Germany's submarine strength.

Striking a balance between Allied and German claims, it is estimated here that the Nazis had about 70 submarines when the war began and had a building capacity of about five per month.

Since then Germany has lost about 30 undersea craft, observers calculate, but has stepped up her building program until it has probably reached a top figure of 12 a month.

100 in U-Boat Fleet

For the last few months Nazi submarines have seldom appeared in action, and it is believed here that they are being held in their home ports for "the day" of attack upon England.

Based on these figures, the German undersea fleet now numbers about 100 craft—40 pre-war vessels and 60 ships recently constructed.

The submarines built since the war started, however, are reported designed primarily as undersea transports, with a range of only several hundred miles instead of the thousand mile range possessed by standard classes.

The latter normally carry a crew of 150 men. On the new submarines, armament has been sacrificed to enable them to carry 400 fully armed men and some motorcycles, it is said.

Older submarines are believed being refitted on similar lines.

Experts agree that a fleet of such undersea craft engaged in transport work against a strong naval force needs protection from destroyers or other craft.

The Germans are said to have solved this problem by ordering scores of Italian-made "pocket subs" 36 feet long.

Swiss sources said Italian manufacturers have been shipping these swift craft, which carry a crew of seven and one torpedo tube, through the Brenner Pass by rail into Germany since last October. The vessels are knocked down for transportation.

The German plan was believed to call for the extensive use of bombing planes to aid the "pocket subs" in the task of guarding undersea transport operations.

Philatelists Urge 5-Cent Stamp To Aid Red Cross

A five-cent postage stamp, to give 3 cents in mail carriage and 2 cents to the Red Cross, has been suggested by Washington philatelists. If approved by President Roosevelt, it would be this country's first charity stamp.

The suggested design is the Red Cross poster of F. Sands Brunner, the little girl with her doll in the ruins of her home. As a stamp, the word "Give" would be replaced by "United States Postage—3c—2c."

The petition to Mr. Roosevelt urging adoption of the stamp was sponsored by Capt. Wilbur R. Van Auken, U. S. N. (retired), president of the Washington Philatelic Society; David D. Caldwell, principal attorney of the Justice Department and chairman of the Postage Stamp Centenary Committee, and Edward B. Martin, recording secretary of the Collectors Club of Washington. Red Cross Chairman Norman H. Davis and Ramsey S. Black, Third Assistant Postmaster General, have approved the plan, its sponsors said.

Women Ask Equal Chance in U. S. Aircraft Program

Atlantic City, N. J., June 9 (AP).—The National Women's Party, in convention here, resolved today to seek equal opportunity for women in aircraft pilot training, and decided to petition the Civil Aeronautics Authority to eliminate a regulation which limits women to 10 per cent of those receiving training under the CAA's new pilot training program.

Another resolution petitioned President Roosevelt to use his authority to see that there is no discrimination against women in employment because of their marital status. It set forth that women are barred from jobs in "certain" Federal bureaus because they are married.

stand right, justice and Christian decency and on which side are wrong, cruelty and bestiality," Bullitt said.

"They believe in France."

White House Silent

Administration officials in Washington made no comment on the statement of Ambassador William C. Bullitt that every civilized man prayed "for the victory of France."

There was no hint whether the White House or State Department had advance information on what Bullitt would say in his address in ceremonies at the birthplace of Joan of Arc.

A pro Ally speech by James H. R. Cromwell while he was Minister to Canada brought a sharp reprimand from Secretary of State Hull and a warning against repeating such statements while in a diplomatic post.

Charles H. Taylor Elected to High Masonic Office

Charles H. Taylor, of 1506 Van Buren street northwest, assistant director of Civilian Conservation Corps, will serve as deputy president of the National League of Masonic Clubs, it was announced yesterday.

He was elected at the league's thirty-fifth annual convention which closed recently in Atlantic City. The league voted to increase to 12 the number of free scholarships which it will support at George Washington University's school of government. For several years the league has maintained three scholarships there.

The league adopted a resolution asking "all patriotic organizations" to campaign against "fifth column" activities. The resolution said the time had come for "loyal Americans to use every lawful means at their disposal to defeat the efforts of those who seek to change our form of government and deprive our people of the liberties they now enjoy."

Edmund R. Lowe, of New York, was elected president of the league to succeed William Mosley Brown, of New York, formerly of Arlington, Va.

Many Small Craft Were Lost At Dunkerque, Says Admiral

London, June 9 (AP).—Many small boats were lost in the withdrawal of Allied troops from Dunkerque, Vice Admiral Bertram Ramsay said today, adding that the total might never be known.

"Many of the small craft which disappeared into the haze of Dunkerque will largely go unthanked because we don't really know who they were," said Ramsay. He directed the naval forces in the rescue work.

A number of cutters, dories and skiffs were lost before they reached Dunkerque, he said.

"We got an inquiry from the Port of London Authority yesterday about 34 motor lifeboats and 88 ships' lifeboats. They said they had got six back and wanted to know where were the rest. If they get back another dozen they will be lucky. The beach over there must be strewn with wrecked boats."

The actual embarkation of men at Dunkerque started at the docks, Ramsay said, but the German bombers soon put an end to that, setting such raging fires that the troops could not stand the heat.

Then a narrow pier or breakwater of wooden piles was used, he said.

"There came something like 250,000 men off this pier—a place never intended in the wildest imagination as a place for a ship to go alongside," he continued. There were no gangways so the men marched onto the ships from the pier across narrow mess tables.

The small boats were called for when it became apparent that "we must embark also from the beaches."

On the first night of the evacuation, May 28, Ramsay said, they took off 13,000 men; on the second night, 20,000; on the third, 45,000.

"Our peak day was 66,000 men taken off but that was only gained at the expense of casualties to craft."

An Unauthorized Draft

"Relief directors should be advised to refuse relief to single persons eligible for military service and to require unmarried persons in relief families to enlist." Such are the instructions sent out by Arthur Mudd, New Jersey's director of relief. Mr. Mudd asserts that his policy is consistent with existing regulations requiring all "able-minded" persons to accept whatever employment is available.

The people of America do not, however, regard military service as merely a form of employment. Indeed, the distinction between military and civilian activities has been consistently emphasized, as shown by the care taken to keep the CCC from being utilized as a military training organization. Since the young men who enlist in the CCC come from the ranks of those especially fit for military service, there can be no doubt that the relief policy of the Federal Government has run counter to the principles enunciated by New Jersey's director of relief.

In time of peace, service in the armed forces of the United States has been entirely voluntary. So long as it remains so, there is no justification for any form of compulsion to speed enlistment. To apply pressure to the destitute unemployed and their families as a means of stimulating recruiting is a particularly flagrant abuse of power deserving sharp condemnation.

The Nation's defense forces would not be strengthened, moreover, by the addition of young men driven to enlist by fear of hunger.

If universal, compulsory military service should become necessary, it would apply without discrimination to all individuals meeting general eligibility standards. Under the existing voluntary system, officials connected with relief agencies are not commissioned to find recruits for the defense forces. Their duty lies in ministering to the needs of destitute persons unable to make a living in civilian occupations.

The Howling Dervishes

Some eerie stories are being told in London and Paris concerning battlefield behavior of Hitler's shock troops or, as the French have come to call them, the "howling dervishes."

These, it appears, are mostly boys still in the beardless stage who have been either trained or inspired to rush in pell-mell masses into the deadliest artillery and machine gun fire with wild shrieks of "Heil Hitler!" Allied soldiers from Flanders and the Weygand Line tell of having mown them down by thousands, even tens of thousands. A correspondent of the New York Times quotes a Frenchman as saying: "All you have to do is to hold your gun and let fly into the mass. They must be doped to act like that."

The correspondent himself, however, believes that pure fanaticism rather than drugs or liquor is the explanation. He compares them to the Fuzzy Wuzzies who hurled themselves against the British Squares in the Soudan and actually broke them. Another comparison might have been drawn with the famous Janazaries of the Ottoman Emperors, trained from childhood to just such feats of self-immolation.

However exaggerated these reports may be, mass infantry attack is scarcely a novelty in European warfare. It was the principal tactic of the French Revolutionary armies and responsible for their successes, which were more extensive and spectacular than even Hitler's up to now. This form of assault, however, developed more out of the dilemma of the commanders than from any fanaticism of the troops. The Jacobin committees had neither patience nor mercy with generals who lost battles or who failed to follow up victory fast enough. At the same time the government could provide the generals with only mobs of raw, ragged conscripts ignorant of discipline or drill. But these Carnot could provide in abundance.

The generals, with their heads literally at stake, could only throw these mobs at the enemy without pretense of order and without regard for loss. To the astonishment of everyone the mobs, by their sheer numbers and depth and increasing momentum, crashed through the skirmish lines of the highly trained Austrian and Prussian regulars.

By such leaders as Messena and Napoleon the attack by column was modified, systematized and in a way perfected, until wild masses of men had torn through nearly all the armies of Europe with their cries of "Vive l'Empereur."

Naturally the tactic was soon imitated by Napoleon's enemies, but without much success. The English, however, clung as stubbornly to their faith in the superiority of line over column as some admirals today cling to faith in the superiority of sea power over aircraft. And at the battle of Maida in the Portuguese campaign the French fled in rout after their attacking columns had been shattered by the volleys of the English light infantry.

Case For Cooperation

Several methods of eliminating State trade barriers are suggested by an investigating committee of the Unemployment Conference of the House of Representatives. The committee's first proposal is that Congress withhold Federal highway aid from the States until they adopt a uniform highway code to be prescribed by Congress.

This type of Federal aid is given to the States on the assumption that it will be used to improve highway communications throughout the entire country. Congress certainly had in mind, in passing the highway-aid statute, that the general effect would be to knit the distant parts of this vast country into a better organized unit. Yet some States, while accepting this money, have defeated the purpose of the grant by establishing legal ports of entry and in other ways hindering the flow of commerce across their boundaries.

By all means Congress should use its influence to counteract this reactionary tendency. Ports of entry at State lines are utterly repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution which gives Congress full power to regulate commerce among the States. It does not follow, however, that Congress should itself try to force a highway code of its own making upon the 48 States.

In this respect another proposal in the report to the Unemployment Conference appears to hold more promise. Congress is asked to authorize the Department of State to offer its services to the States, when so requested by two or more Governors, in an effort to remove State trade barriers. Under this plan the States would be encouraged to solve their own problems, instead of having a solution imposed upon them from Washington.

Much progress has been made toward restoration of free commercial traffic across State lines through the unifying influence of the Council of State Governments. What is needed is a means of tying these efforts in with the movement in Congress to abolish State trade barriers. In other words, the whole problem of Federal-State relationships should be analyzed by a group of experts representing both the national and the local points of view. The keynote to be sounded is cooperation and not coercion.

Congress has encroached upon the powers of the States no less flagrantly than the States are encroaching upon the powers of Congress. A new understanding should be sought. And such an understanding can come only through a mutual exploration of the problem. Why doesn't Congress take the initiative by authorizing such a study in cooperation with the Council of State Governments?

Student Opinions

Dean Ackerman, of the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism, is a stanch champion of free speech. In this attitude he should have the support of every intelligent and responsible American, at all times and especially at this time.

There is a pertinent distinction between the right of free speech and the judicious exercise of that right. In an address on war propaganda, Dean Ackerman defends the action of students in 30 colleges, who have signed petitions to President Roosevelt. He regrets that "for their courage and conscientious expressions of opinion these young men have been publicly 'spanked' for speaking on foreign policies, even in some instances by their own professors."

"College students of this generation," Dr. Ackerman continues, "have been taught to think for themselves. Why should they now be denounced for applying in public life what they have been taught by parents and teachers?"

That the students should have been denounced is unfortunate. If some of them have been "accused of being Communists and pro-Nazi," as Dean Ackerman says, that is even more unfortunate. There is every reason, on the other hand, why college students should refrain from participation in national and international affairs.

The very purposes of education demand a certain amount of academic isolation. It is in the colleges that thought is evolved and molded. It would be a tragic mistake if we encouraged crystallization of thought before it is allowed the free play and unrestricted access to sources which colleges can afford. Action crystallizes thought.

That is the minor danger. The major danger is that political or other similar activity in the colleges might be an invitation for organized meddlers of all types to bend student movements to their own ends and for counter-meddlers to seek restrictions which would destroy our centuries-old academic freedom. There are indications that special interests already have had some success in subverting student groups which were formed spontaneously for action outside the strictly academic sphere. There have been consequent and regrettable proposals to interfere.

The correction must come from within the colleges. Dean Ackerman doubtless would be the first to grieve if his statement of good principles should contribute to the growth of a situation like that in Italy, where Fascist students are marshaled to demonstrate for the momentary objectives of the ruling party.

Along The Labor Front

Last week brought several important developments which have a bearing upon the chances for termination of the A. F. of L.-C. I. O. conflict.

Led by David Dubinsky, the powerful International Ladies Garment Workers Union, which seceded from the C. I. O. in 1938, was formally readmitted into the A. F. of L. As Mr. Dubinsky is a strong advocate of peace, it is believed that his presence will strengthen the movement within the A. F. of L. to effect a reconciliation with the C. I. O. It is also possible that fear of further defections may tend to break down C. I. O. resistance to peace offers.

In any case, the prestige of the A. F. of L. has been heightened by the recapture of a quarter of a million former members. The fact that Mr. Dubinsky has been extremely critical of the tolerance displayed toward racketeers within the A. F. of L. suggests that more active steps may now be taken to eliminate those elements.

Unfortunately, while Mr. Green was reaffirming his readiness to enter into new conferences with the C. I. O., he was also engaged in lobbying activities to secure approval of an amendment to the National Labor Relations Act highly favorable to craft unions. Passage of that amendment last week by the House will undoubtedly arouse the fighting spirit of the C. I. O. and may for a time interfere with peace overtures.

The Green amendment, however, is an outgrowth of factional strife as well as being a present obstacle to peace. For the struggle to secure changes in labor legislation, with a view to strengthening the bargaining position of a particular kind of union, would have no purpose if there were no rivalries of major proportions. The action of the House has greatly emphasized the need for amicable settlement of questions of organization and bargaining strategy by leaders of the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

A Chance To Help

A paradoxical footnote to the widely expressed sympathy of the American people for the Allies is the lagging response to the appeal by the Red Cross for humanitarian aid. After nearly a month of the campaign for war relief funds, $8,724,379 had been contributed toward a goal of $20,000,000.

It is strange that, when so many are urging the dispatch of guns, ships, planes or even men, there should be so little practical interest in the step we can take without violating the principles or jeopardizing the safety of a single individual.

A case of quinine is less spectacular than a crate of machine guns. But if this is the factor which holds back our hands, it speaks poorly for the American sense of balance. General Pershing has pointed out that in 1917, after a declaration of war, we met an appeal for $100,000,000 with subscriptions of more than $114,000,000. Are we, then, disinclined to help women, children, the homeless and the wounded unless we are involved in conflict ourselves? At such a time as this we are more able to give, and the need is as great as it was 23 years ago.

The District campaign, which began May 22, has been somewhat more successful than that in the Nation at large. With a quota of $300,000, residents of Washington have donated $163,000. The chairman of the local drive, however, has warned that the "last $100,000" will be more difficult to obtain. Perhaps the loading of the first relief ship in Baltimore harbor, though not so inspiring to some as the departure of a battleship would be, is action tangible enough to stir those who have not yet opened their hearts.

The value of news decreases according to the square of the distance between its source and the reader.

It takes all sorts of people to make a world, but only a few of the wrong kind to unmake it.

The usual lovers' good-by is much adieu about nothing.

On Atrocities

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to a letter which appeared in The Post of June 4 and in which the writer wonders if the President and Senator Brown are trying to arouse our emotions by recounting unproven tales of Germans machine-gunning refugees, I would like to say that there have been eyewitness accounts of this. One young woman, who was on the spot, helping to evacuate the children from one of Miss Morgan's bases in the north, where the American Friends of France were established before the German invasion, says in a letter—written to her family, in haste, next day, with no time to embroider the facts, but only to assure them of her own safety:

"We are often machine-gunned, too. The planes come so close down; the Germans don't want them to get away safely; they machine-gun them in the roads—these poor people, without homes, without food."

Miss Morgan, too, cabled of the refugees being machine-gunned while she was in northern France.

There is certainly no use in growing hysterical over accounts of atrocities committed during war. I was working in France for two years during the last war, and I tried never to believe stories of excessive brutality unless they were recounted by reliable eyewitnesses.

No, don't let us grow emotional over atrocities, but, on the other side, don't let us hush-hush the facts, which come to us first hand from reliable sources. To suppress them would, in itself, be propaganda.

"A Nation Unprepared"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your interesting editorial in The Post of May 29 on "A Nation Unprepared," commenting on a statement by Mr. MacLeish, omits any mention of the truly vital feature in the present national outlook, which is the issue of a house divided. Up to about the time of the discovery of gold in California, the country consisted overwhelmingly of the old American stock, whose faith, as strong as any religious faith, was founded on the belief, not in an absolute democracy, but in a limited republic. After that time unrestricted immigration poured into the country, amounting to, perhaps, a million yearly.

This continuing, accumulating immigration and its progeny helped to develop the country mightily and brought vast material riches into existence. But mostly, it was a merely materialistic development. Instead of the melting pot working according to theory, the contents began melting the pot.

In this day one might think of it as the invasion of a fifth column, not an intentionally hostile one, but one introducing elements intrinsically so. It had had no baptism in the early American struggle for existence. It did not instinctively feel or grasp the early tradition, though at the time of Andrew Carnegie there were many newcomers who began to grasp it, more or less.

So today there is conflict in the divided house, and to all appearances those of the old tradition have been driven to the wall.

Hitler's Objective

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many Americans are of the opinion that it would be an impossibility for one man at the controls of a powerful war machine to conquer the world. On the contrary, under the circumstances which prevail today, I believe that such a feat is becoming a very serious probability. Germany has the largest and most effective war machine the world has ever seen, and it has been greatly underestimated. Germany's "fifth columnists" are in every country in the world, with the sole objective to overthrow that particular government. Hitler has proven himself to be a ruthless murderer, and he has openly declared that it is his final objective to conquer the world.

We know that he has subjugated every country in Europe of any importance. We know what he does to the conquered who oppose him. We know what he is doing to the remaining democracies in Europe. We know from his writings in "Mein Kampf" what he plans to do to Russia if he gets the opportunity. We know also that South America is perhaps his most fruitful objective. Most important, we know that (quote Dorothy Thompson) Hitler predicted civil war and a Nazi victory in this country by 1944.

We can do more than we are doing to prevent such a disaster. In the first place, we should openly declare ourselves against Hitler and do everything possible to bring about his defeat, short of sending manpower into the battle. Such a decree by America would have far-reaching effect on the future intentions of Italy and Spain. We can carry on a more vigorous campaign against the fifth columnists and deal with them as they would be dealt with in Germany. We should also direct our own propaganda machine in other countries as a counterattack against German propaganda.

A Nazi victory in Europe would be a constant menace to America and America, in view of Hitler's final objective, will be a nasty thorn in Germany's side. This set-up would result in only one thing—a war to destroy Nazism, Hitler and everything he stands for.

Appeasing Japan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Japanese government and the small minority of Americans who profit from aggression in the Far East appear to have recruited a new propagandist in the person of Mr. Walter Lippmann.

His column of June 6 is an affront to 82 per cent of the American people who have expressed their sympathy with China and their desire for an embargo on goods shipped to Japan.

Japan, he says, has a special interest in China. This interest he compares to the special interest of the United States in the Western Hemisphere. To compare our country, which is at peace with Japan, who has been ruthlessly invading China for three years, is an insult to the American people's desire to remain at peace.

Mr. Lippmann states that Japan's commerce with this country is of critical importance to the standard of living of the Japanese people. Do arms, ammunition and implements of war (the bulk of our trade with Japan) feed and clothe the Japanese people? On the contrary, the continuation of this war deprives the Japanese people of all those things we consider necessary for a decent life.

If we really wish to help the Japanese as well as the Chinese people, we have but to halt American shipments of war materials by American businessmen. The Japanese war machine cannot continue without our assistance and collaboration. We have it in our power to stop a war which has already lasted three years too long.

MURIEL F. KOENIGSBERG,
Executive Secretary, Washington Committee for Aid to China.

Washington, June 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Walter Lippmann is so impressed by the success of appeasement in Europe that he advocates the extension of this beneficent policy to Asia. He suggests that we sit down in a spirit of sweet reasonableness with the Japanese and negotiate a new treaty without reference to what happens in China.

Even if the immorality of this procedure should be condoned by the necessity of not dividing our defense, we should still have to surmount two obstacles to its accomplishment. They are, first that it is practically impossible to catch the military dictatorship of Japan in a spirit of sweet reasonableness, and second that this same military dictatorship cannot be trusted to adhere to the terms of a treaty when there is one.

We already have plenty of treaties with Japan. The problem is not to obtain a new one, but to find some means of prevailing upon the Japanese to keep one of those which we have—let us say, the Nine-Power Treaty to begin with. We have one implement—the embargo on materials for war purposes. Nothing but sheer pusillanimity and appeasement psychosis of the kind which has put Britain and France where they are now has prevented us from using it.

There seems to be some doubt as to whether the Congress or the Department of State has shown more of these engaging qualities, but the net result seems to be that the doctrine magniloquently described as "separation of the powers" turns out to be none other than our old friend "passing the buck" in disguise. China is our Czecho-Slovakia. We are treading the same road as Britain trod.

Neutrality Act Repeal

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Surely the time has come for Congress to consider repeal of that abortion of democracy known as the Neutrality Act of 1939. The "joint resolution" of Congress was passed with the declared purpose "To preserve the neutrality and peace of the United States and to secure the safety of its citizens and their interests." Since becoming law as of November 4, 1939, the act has been shown beyond a shadow of doubt to be spurious and fictitious as an expression of public opinion. It vitiates its declared purpose. It should be replaced in the interests of national honor and of national security.

Under the provisions of the act an American citizen may be penalized for entering a "combat area," for furnishing goods and services to any belligerent (except for cash, God save the mark!) and for aiding a belligerent with money or credit. By the law all Americans are prohibited from taking any part in the present war against German aggression. The law purports to deny free born Americans their inalienable right to resist aggression with their lives or their property.

Peculiar Pets

Cousin John has a squirrel. Or, rather, several squirrels. Everybody says he takes after me, and I am beginning to believe he does, what with the weird collection of fauna that is growing up around his household. To date there are, I believe, 55 white mice, 2 white rats, a mongrel dog, 2 Dalmatians, several ducks, salamanders, turtles, goldfish, and the aforementioned squirrels. This is subject to revision, of course, as I haven't got any dispatches from Cousin John's house lately, and the pet situation there is never static for very long.

Most of my pets are commonplace. Some might be amazed by the white mice, increasing as they did from 6 to 65 in the space of three weeks. But they just don't know white mice.

But the ducks are really unusual. Last Easter Johnnie and his kid brother, Bill, were presented with two downy ducklings. They always ask for livestock, and their parents oblige each Christmas, Easter and birthday. Within three days Johnnie had become the proud possessor of Bill's duck, in a trade agreement that involved three marbles and a broken-down erector set. Bill does not share his brother's delight for the creatures of the earth.

Well, these ducks grew and grew. As the weather got warmer, and as the ducklings turned into ungainly, moulting adolescents, they were consigned to the back yard. Then one day tragedy fell. The back gate was left open, and the two ducks left for parts unknown. The boys were heartbroken, their parents were rather relieved. Ten days went by; everyone agreed that the ducks had gone for good. They were no place to be found; the neighborhood had been scoured. But the ducks had not gone for good.

One sunny Saturday morning, the ducks came back. Instead of two ducks waddling home, four—identically alike, of the same generation—returned to the fold. They were not parents and offspring, they were just friends. Where the original ducks had been, where they had picked up their friends, remains a neighborhood mystery.

Last week my aunt, with worry in her voice, called up to say that the wandering ducks had disappeared again. She is living in fear and trembling lest eight return some sunny Saturday in the near future.

The squirrel is more normal. He dropped out of a nest in Johnnie's yard last summer, and was raised on an eyedropper. All autumn and winter he lived on the inclosed screen porch. He grew fat on nuts and milk. He was quite tame. He lived in a nest on the rafters, and would daily go through the motions of burying the leftover nuts on the stone floor.

Then came spring, and everybody hoped Squeeky would get the mating instinct. But not Squeeky. He was much too happy on his porch; other squirrels did not feaze him. One day, however, my aunt decided that Squeeky must go back to the trees. So he was tuurned out. In vain did he scratch on the screen door; in vain did he drop out of the trees, twittering to be taken back into the house.

Finally the little squirrel got the idea. A lady squirrel came to the yard one day, and, fascinated by Squeeky, decided to stay. Then another lady squirrel appeared, and another until today Squeeky has a harem all his own.

All this brings back my own younger days. I never see Cousin John without thinking of the astonishing parade of pets that paraded through my own life. Dogs, cats, white mice, guinea pigs, rabbits and goldfish were common stuff to me. I went in for the more novel kind—snakes, raccoons, opossums and the like. My best friend and I used to go to Scout meeting with horned toads in our hats. During recess at school we would collect caterpillars, which we allowed to crawl all over our desks and the little girls' backs in the first afternoon class. Once a colored maid left the employ of our family because, when cleaning out my dresser drawer, she found herself face to face with a snake who was spending a few days in a jar in the drawer. Of course, it was a common watersnake, perfectly harmless and not more than 5 inches long—practically tame, in fact, but that made no differenec to Sophrenia.

Every spring I used to hike joyously to the woods and spend all day Saturday with my best friend hunting crawfish, tadpoles, turtles and snakes. I had a particular fondness for spring peepers, the little frogs that make such a racket. Such a racket, in fact, that we were almost evicted from our apartment one night when a spring peeper the size of a thumbtack decided to sing from his temporary home in the bathtub at 3 a. m.

Of course the family objected strenuously from time to time. But the only time I was stopped short was when mother refused point-blank to let me send to New Mexico for an armadillo. And I had saved up $5 for the purpose, too. When we lived in the South I used to catch baby 'possums, frequently, in our garbage pails. The young ones would come with their parents during the night for a feast, and, unable to get out again, they were left behind by their careless mothers. These were vicious little beasties, and I would always give them away after a few weeks to the husband of our current cook. Other unique playthings that I tenderly kept included an 8-pound carp, which I housed in an old horse trough for three months; two or three 50-pound snapping turtles, a moth-eaten parrakeet and a colony of ants. I never did things in a meager manner—oftentimes my mother has groaned as I ran up the front walk with eight or nine scrawny, yowling, newborn kittens in my arms, or a dear little skunk or copperhead in a box.

But, time has fled, and so has my menagerie. Today all that remains, besides the memories, is Duke, my old dog. Occasionally, in a mad moment, I will buy a mess of baby turtles or a bowl full of tropical fish, but my flights of fancy are getting fewer and more commonplace. I'll have to leave the pets to Cousin John. RICHARD OULAHAN, JR.

Union Revolt

THE UNDERWORLD gorillas of the labor movement took a defiant stand last week in the Louisville convention of the Stagehands and Movie Employes Union, but their challenge was taken up in New York by the Ladies' Garment Workers Union as one of the conditions of their return to the American Federation of Labor. The garment workers thus have begun a fight against the reorganized Capone and Nitti mob and other criminals in organized labor, and David Dubinsky, their president, will deserve credit for the eventual victory. The victory will be won probably at this year's convention of the A. F. of L. And it will be an easy victory, for rank-and-file opinion in the unions is bitterly and violently rebellious against the brutality and larceny of such racketeers, brothel-keepers and stick-up men as received the indorsement of the movie union in Louisville.

It is unfortunate that William Green, whom labor honored with a position of public trust, played the role of a Lord Jim in this shameful situation, for just a little courage would have carried him through with great credit. It really takes no great bravery in a man in Green's position to fight the racketeers.

Instead of denouncing the criminals at their own meeting in Louisville, Green dogged it, and Dubinsky accepted the battle in the convention of the garment workers with a stipulation that the hoodlums of the underworld and other union exploiters of labor must be thrown out.

MR. GREEN still hedged in a letter to Dubinsky, granting the other conditions on which the garment workers insisted, for in that letter he avoided mention of the issue of the criminal invasion of the unions. Finally, however, he did say that labor can invite public support only when it is honest in its dealings. But even then he modified his declaration by observing that there are racketeers in other fields, which has nothing to do with the case.

The truth is that Mr. Green's own hands are not clean. He played ball with the crooked unioneers and, in return for their support in the internal politics of the A. F. of L. and in the fight with the C. I. O., became an apologist for men who are a disgrace to the labor movement and have no more right to sit in labor's councils than Joseph Stalin has to sit in the College of Cardinals. He knew they were crooked and knew that the rank and file were suffering from their thefts, extortions and oppressions, but left it to Dubinsky and the garment workers to show a decent, militant determination to do the obvious thing.

The garment workers will map their campaign to delouse the A. F. of L., but one of the men who are unfit and must be thrown out is George Browne, the president of the Stagehands and Movie Employes, who are 35,000 strong. Mr. Browne is not his own man. He was picked up out of obscurity and a speakeasy milieu by a Chicago mob and placed in the union presidency as a dummy for the racket.

He proved this by appointing Willie Bioff and a stick-up man, Nick Circella, to positions of greater power than his own, and he continued to serve his criminal bosses this week in Louisville when he repeated again his apology for his criminal associates to the effect they erred briefly as adolescents but have gone straight ever since.

BROWNE KNOWS—because he has run with these racketeers for years—that Bioff was not a boy but a mature man and a confirmed gangster when he was sentenced for pandering. He knows, too, that Bioff continued to be a gangster until as recently as 1929, his last of many recorded arrests. He knows that Circella has a long and uncommonly nasty police record; that neither of these crooks ever was elected to any position in the labor movement, and that their only function in the union is to represent themselves and the criminal mob.

In the face of these facts, and in defiance of the decent rank and file, the racket convention in Louisville adopted a resolution of sympathy for Bioff, who was described as "brother," and affirmed its "belief in the honesty and integrity" of the dirtiest creature that ever fouled the nest of labor.

But the A. F. of L. is so badly infested that Browne himself actually sits on the national executive council, the cabinet of President Green.

But Browne will not stand up against Dubinsky and the clean men of the A. F. of L. if they carry the fight to him. He will quit and run. And Bioff and Circella and all the rest of the grafters and thieves, the panders and hold-up men and union puppets of the underworld will be easily eliminated if Dubinsky really fights, as apparently he will.

The Once Over

Business Report

Our business now is on the rise—
The figures show our trade is booming;
Our management is extra wise—
Full speed ahead we now are zooming;
Our gross last year was at a high,
New orders make the outlook sunny;
For what we sell the people cry—
I wish that we could make some money!

II.

In '38 we did quite well,
But 1939 was better;
Demands for shipments daily swell
By cable, telephone and letter;
We're putting on an extra shift,
Our next report will be a honey;
The figures show an upward drift—
I wish that we could make some money!

III.

The first three months of forty were
The best by far since the depression;
Throughout the plant things are astir—
This is no boast, but a confession;
A night shift we must now employ—
We're busier than Eugene Tunney—
Our unfilled orders are a joy—
We're hoping we may make some money!

IV.

The slump seems of an ancient day—
We're in what's called a good position;
We ought to have a record May—
Our men are full of high ambition;
Each month shows that we forge ahead—
The outlook's fine, hey, nonny-nonny!
We will not go into the red—
But still we won't make any money.

V.

We're adding on another wing
To take care of increasing orders;
The business shows an upward swing—
Our board is not a bunch of hoarders;
This year should be a banner one,
(That tax man's here again, how funny!)
We've nothing now to fear but fear—
I wish that we could make some money!

Who once declared with sad grimaces,
"Nobody makes a pass at me,"

Peepul's Choice

I'm sick of hearing the brassy ring of each politician's voice,
And when the elections come next fall,
Here's how I shall make my choice,
I'll vote for whoever will swear to bring
A balmy spring!

Prometheus Bound

By Dorothy Thompson

America As Giver Of Light

THE MYTH of Prometheus has always attracted poets. Prometheus was the friend and benefactor of mankind. He defended men against Jove, who, according to one version of the myth, wished to destroy mankind and supplant it by a new and better species, or—according to another version—wanted to avenge himself because men had got the better of him. Prometheus tricked him; he offered the Olympian a choice of the meats of sacrifice, and Jove, thinking he was choosing the fats, found only bones underneath, for the real meat was in the other sacrifice, though it was covered with filth. Jove, to take revenge, withdrew the gift of fire from mankind, to keep it for himself—fire, which is either destruction or light—and Prometheus stole it back. For this Jove chained him to a rock, where the eagle and the vulture preyed upon his liver for eons of time, until, at last, he was liberated by Jove's own son, according to the prophecy.

THIS NATION OF OURS is like Prometheus bound. The genius of America is dual; the passionate idealism of our beginnings; the vision of a country that should be the benefactor of mankind; of a union of states whose people were the surplus of the earth, the great unwanted, reborn, in the New World, with a new vision. That is the genius of our spirit.

And the genius of our hands has been invention. Americans had the gift to bring down fire from heaven and put it at the service of man. Count the inventions of this great age of discovery and find the orginators. Electricity, radio, rationalized and mass-production industry, automobiles, airplanes—in the world-wide revolution of science, technology and mass production, this country has been the torch bearer, the fire fighter, the forerunner. Of "restless, violent hands and casual tongue" here, in the New World, mankind was "moulding its mighty fate."*

WHAT HAS HAPPENED to this bright Pometheus, that he is bound and helpless, exposed to the Eagle's swoop and the Vulture's tear? With what chains are we bound, as bound we are? Did Jove forge them, or did we spin chains, unwittingly, out of a thousand threads?

Bound we are. The vital energy of America pulls against the chain of threads that bind our hands and our feet, that are webbed over our eyes, that strangle us around the heart. The youth of America walk in idleness, the weaker among them become listless, the best among them are furious, the luckiest among them merely thank their stars. What are they asking for? Work. Work that makes sense; work with their contemporaries and their elders, in a common cause, a cause that makes sense. A cause. Something worth living for; something worth dying for.

WE HAVE INHERITED a great estate, and it lies half used. The parable of the talents is revived, but he who buries his talents in the ground is hailed as the hero, for he is contributing to mitigate overproduction! The symbol of the golden calf is supplanted by the symbol of the buried treasure. Taken out of the mines from here and there throughout the world, it is refined, and blocked and buried again in the ground, in Kentucky, watched by guards to see that it remains in the ground, unused.

Meanwhile we demand that fellow human beings, men like you and me, acting exactly as you and I would act, under exactly the same circumstances, fighting for the soil they have tilled, and the houses they have built, and the liberties they have won, and the way of life that they have formed—the while we effusively offer our sympathies—we demand of them that they shall pay more gold for the weapons with which to defend themselves; we call it cash and carry and say it will keep us out of war. Since we have too much sense to believe our own words, we begin to plan for war.

Nobody is neutral except the indifferent. Nobody is indifferent, and so nobody is neutral. This fact, being true, is dangerous, for it might induce us to do something; so we pass a neutrality act and bind ourselves hand and foot so that no ship can carry surplus food to the starving; so that no doctor, bored with an office empty of patients, can go to a field where patients will at least murmur grateful words; so that no young man full of ardor for a cause will express it in action. While our youth, out of sheer waste of surplus energy, kill themselves on every Sunday afternoon driving automobiles too fast, we take every measure possible to assure their safety to walk the streets unwanted.

OUR INDUSTRY is the marvel of the world. On its model Hitler built a machine to blow up the earth. In our industries are willing hands, and organizational and scientific brains which could create the plans by which this country could become the world's best estate, with the furnace rooms and kitchens, playgrounds and gardens, workshops and industries of the happiest and busiest of families, and with all that is needed to defend that estate, at home and at its outposts.

But the family quarrels, and the estate is neglected. The power is not used; the dynamos are cut from the transmission system. Our industries, in which are the best, most realistic, and most creative brains of America, are given no adequate social task.

The recognition that true self-interest and true social interest invariably correspond on the long balance is replaced by the idea of a permanent warfare between social groups, with the result that nobody profits and the books do not even balance.

Labor gets every conceivable sort of right—it gets everything except work, three square meals a day, a decent home and the respect of the community. The profit of effort, which should accrue to the whole society and invariably must so accrue with almost mathematical precision if only the simplest principles of justice and realism prevail, is either siphoned off to the least creative individuals or extorted by organized pressure.

THERE IS in this people a vitality, a life-affirming will and an idealism that have not even been tapped yet. The power of this country is not in the government, it is spread about through millions of individuals, and through thousands of social groups. This power can be put in motion with the greatest of ease, but the whole apparatus which binds us with procedures, legalisms, bureaucracy and vested interests trips up that power at every step, until a lassitude has overtaken the bound Titan.

To take a simple illustration: The other night, on the air, speaking in behalf of the Red Cross, I suggested that one of the most useful things we could do for humanity at this moment would be to take a hundred thousand Dutch, Belgian and French children to this country for the duration of the war.

There is every possible reason for doing this; not only considerations of humanity, but considerations of long-term self-interest. If not one of those children ever returned, they would be a gift to America, that needs children. Any demographic expert will tell you so. We are getting to be an old people—partly because the will to life and to the use of our powers is so strangled.

Furthermore, it could be done without its costing the Government a cent, without a single bureaucrat—with nothing from the Government except the delegation to the Christian churches—or, for that matter to the Federation of Women's Clubs—of the power to do it.

And they would do it supremely well. They would find a home for every child, and a home as compatible as possible with that child's background, and they would do it speedily, efficiently and enthusiastically, and maintain the records.

But the State Department won't let us, because it insists on formal procedures which are impossible in the present emergency. It is not the emergency which matters, but the procedures. The form is more important than the content. And if the Government can't do it—through a whole network of bureaucrats and salaries—then nobody can do it.

WE NEED NOT the restriction and regimentation of energy, but the release of energies, into a system of coordinated, communal action.

We need to decentralize power and leash it all to a common goal. We do not need government to do for us what we could do much more efficiently for ourselves, but we do need government to plan a common endeavor and let loose the opportunity.

Prometheus is bound. We do not need to feed him pap, but to liberate him. And mark my words: if we do not do so there will be, one of these days, an explosion. For the Nation is too vital to hang around street corners forever. And the saw is none the less true because it is banal, that "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

WILLING TO BE TAXED FOR DEFENSE?
Thousands of Americans like these, says Ernest Lindley, have been writing to their Senators and Representatives to urge higher taxes on their own incomes

Revival Of Spirit

By Ernest Lindley

American Citizens Aroused

UNLESS THE PULSATIONS felt in Washington are misleading, the people of the United States are feeling such a release of energy and united determination as has been seen only twice in this century—during 1917-18 and, in a lower key, during 1933, when millions marched under the Blue Eagle. They seem to be aching to do something on the grand manner, befitting their numbers, resources and ability.

Thousands of people have been writing to their Senators and Congressmen urging higher taxes—not the taxes on others, but taxes on their own incomes. Thousands have been expressing, in one way or another, their disappointment with the half-way, lukewarm measures for our defense which the President and Congress have advocated. On the question of national defense—national action in its broadest sense—public opinion seems to have been running ahead both of the President and of Congress. Both literally are being compelled by public opinion to do what, by the normal standards of politics, has been considered suicide—to increase taxes sharply in an election year.

The President badly underestimated the demands of Congress and the public for national defense in his first emergency message. He probably has still underestimated them in his second message.

In recent columns I have written of the great successes of the Nazi onslaught in the west as a blow to our sense of security. We realize that we have been depending on British sea power to protect us in the Atlantic and that the French army is the breastwork of British sea power. We realize that a total German victory over France and Great Britain would be a grave threat to us.

BUT THERE IS LESS of fear in our response, I think, than of the feeling that our abilities are being challenged. There is a feeling that in the world as it exists today only the fittest can survive. We may be boastful, as we have been in the past, but probably every patriotic American thinks that what the Germans, or any other people, can do in two years, we can do in six months. When Hitler was contemptuously speaking of the impotence of democracies, we assumed he was speaking of Great Britain and France. As to them, he may be wrong. As to us, we feel sure that he is wrong.

We are weary of living at half-speed, of worrying about petty matters when great things are to be done. What those "great things" are we don't know exactly, but we know we have the will and the capacity to do about 300 per cent more than we have done in the last ten years.

Virginio Gayda, journalistic spokesman for Mussolini, has warned us to keep out of European affairs, lest we provoke European powers to intervene in the affairs of the Western Hemisphere. To a sophisticated American citizen, Gayda's warning is a matter of amusement. So would be a warning from Denmark or Hungary, or any other impotent European state which has committed itself to vassalage to Germany. At a less sophisticated level, the American emotional response is likely to be: "You —— —— third assistant to Goebbels, the loyal Americans of Italian descent, led by Fiorello LaGuardia, the ablest public man Italy has given the United States—and who, incidentally, is at least twice the man Mussolini is—will sink you and your following ten fathoms deep in the Atlantic Ocean or the Mediterranean Sea."

This may be vainglorious, but it is in harmony with the revival of the American spirit, as it can be felt on all sides in Washington.

AS TO WHERE, when and how we should use our national strength, there are great differences of opinion. Some people want to declare war on Germany. Some want to defend only the United States and the Panama Canal. Some see that our security requires the defense of the entire Western Hemisphere. Some believe that we should try to hold more distant lines. But that we should gird our loins to protect ourselves on some frontier seems to be an almost unanimous sentiment.

Unless the symptoms discerned in Washington are wrong, the American people want to dedicate their energies to a great purpose.

The President has indorsed at least the first paragraph of an editorial in the New York Times advocating universal military service. Universal service may be just around the corner. It would be a mistake, however, to confine it to special preparation, under the Army and Navy, for the armed services. There is great value in requiring every young person—male or female—to give from six months to one year to the service of his country.

But all this service need not be of a military character. In fact, it is doubtful whether, even in war, the formal army discipline in executing squads right—or whatever drill regulations may now require—is especially suited to the American spirit or to the practical demands of fighting. Even 23 years ago much of the formal training required by the Army was sheer waste of time and energy.

Universal service may be a fine thing, but except as the exigencies of military defense require, it should be kept in civilian hands. And, if it is required, it should be matched by equivalent sacrifices on the part of others. The New York Times suggested that, as an offset, no producer of items essential to our national defense should be allowed to make excess profits. Obviously there is no equality of sacrifice in that formula. If universal service is to be the formula, obviously all recipients of income from stocks and bonds—in every enterprise—must receive less than they now do. In fact, if universal service is to be the cry of the hour, it is doubtful whether any individual should be allowed a net personal income in excess of what we pay the highest salaried men in our Army service.

The Lost Years

By Barnet Nover

Wilson's Forgotten Treaty

SO FAR AS the overwhelming majority of Americans are concerned the point no longer needs arguing that America's strategic frontier in the East is not the Atlantic but a shifting battle line somewhere in France.

The realization of this fearfully disturbing fact has been as sudden as it was violent. Overnight the tenaciously held isolationist illusions of 20 years blew up like a pricked balloon, leaving only a bad smell. Overnight there occurred in the United States a tremendous awakening to the grim realities of this Nation's vital interest in what was happening in Europe.

In the month that has elapsed since Hitler's mechanized armies moved into Holland and Belgium a revolution has occurred in American thinking. And no matter what happens in the critical days that lie ahead it is fair to assume that the people of this country will never again retrace their steps. On May 10, 1940, the American people understood clearly for the first time that in escaping the responsibilities created by its status as a great power the United States has not escaped the consequences.

WE AND THE WORLD are suffering today from the effects of a fearful time lag. The frontiers of our tragic era which may extend far into the future were already visible at the end of the last war. But large numbers of Americans closed their eyes to the situation and declared that what they did not see did not exist. The prolonged debate in the Senate on the League Covenant and the Treaty of Versailles makes grim reading today. The America of 1920 wanted to have its cake and eat it too. It wanted peace but none of the responsibilities that the Nation had to assume if peace were really to be preserved.

One of the poignant ifs of modern history is what would have happened had the United States joined the League and used its power and influence to make operative that system of collective security. It is possible that the post-1919 world would nonetheless have been a world of turmoil and confusion. But it can hardly be assumed that the world today and the United States today would have been any the worse if this country had followed Wilson's lead.

But neither in 1920 nor 1924 nor 1928 nor 1938 were we ready for a policy of political internationalism. And we were not ready because, despite the fact that we had become involved in the European war, we did not understand the realities of our world situation. The best proof of that is to be found not in any examination of the League issue in American politics but in the fate of that now forgotten tripartite treaty which Wilson brought back with him from Paris together with the Versailles Treaty and the League Covenant.

THAT TREATY contained a British and American guarantee to France whereby those nations promised to rush to France's aid were she again the victim of a German attack. It was the price Wilson was prepared to pay to rid France of the gnawing fears that the experience of 1870 and 1914 would sooner or later be repeated and thus to prevent France from seizing the left bank of the Rhine as a physical means of insuring her peace.

Very reluctantly the French agreed to the exchange. They had no confidence in the League, in 1919 a still untried organization. They had no real confidence in the punitive measures of the Versailles Treaty as a means of keeping Germany in check. But an Anglo-American guarantee was something else. Population changes in Europe had made it impossible for France, a nation of 40,000,000 with a declining birth rate, to safeguard herself against Germany by her own efforts alone. And the war had proved that even with the help of Great Britain the maintenance of any effective balance of power in Europe might be difficult. In a very literal sense the help of the New World was needed to redress the balance in the old.

The logic of that situation is now clear to a great many Americans who never before realized that the maintenance of the European balance of power is of vital concern to the United States and to every other nation of this hemisphere. But it was apparent to very few in 1919, so little apparent, in fact that there was almost no support in and out of Congress for the tripartite treaty which Wilson had brought back.

When it came to alliances this Nation wanted none of them, particularly when, as in this instance, such an alliance had the air of being nothing more than a gratuity. In other words, the guarantee to France was never for a moment considered as a means of safeguarding our own security but only as an act of charity to a nation to which, in the opinion of most Americans, we no longer owed anything. The debt to Lafayette, it was said, had been paid with interest. And the United States, at that time, was more than a little fed up on idealism.

Yet would the United States have been any worse off than it is had the tripartite treaty gone into force? A clew to this can be found in the question whether in view of the grim outlook facing the United States we could be worse off. On that point more than a few Americans are likely to reply in the affirmative. Twenty years ago the first battle of the present war was lost. The loss, at that time, was not fatal. But now the fate of civilization is being decided in France, and our fate, too. And now we find to our dismay that our desire to help the Allies is far greater than our immediate capacity to do so, despite our wealth, our resources and our energy. We have let time, precious time, slip through our fingers. At long last we have awakened from our dreams. Let us hope it is not too late.

District Couple Takes Marriage Vows in Cemetery

A Washington couple were married yesterday in a graveyard.

Attractive Ercell Carrico, 19, and Lawrence Welch, 22, both of 2604 Thirty-second street southeast, repeated the traditional "I do" in the Little Chapel of Fort Lincoln, in Fort Lincoln Cemetery, Bladensburg road and District line, first couple to be married there.

Asked her reaction at being married in a graveyard, the bride said: "I was too excited to think about it."

The Rev. Dale Crowley, pastor of the nondenominational chapel, performed the ceremony in the presence of members of the immediate families.

Clarence Welch, brother of the bridegroom, was best man; Dorothy Welch, a sister, was maid of honor, and Carrington Carrico, of Warrenton, father of the bride, gave her in marriage.

Two Large Parties Given for Debutantes

The Robert Woods Blisses Stage Gay Luncheon at 'Dumbarton Oaks,' While Jouett Shouses Entertain at Virginia Home

The merry whirl for the debutantes continued yesterday with two large parties given in their honor.

"Dumbarton Oaks," the Georgetown home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, was the scene of a gay luncheon for young people. They brought their bathing suits along and enjoyed a swim in the Bliss pool which overlooks the tennis court. There were many house guests here for all the gay parties, and they, too, were included in the Bliss luncheon.

From "Dumbarton Oaks" most of them continued right on to another party—Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse's out at their Virginia residence, Wolf Trap Farm. The hosts entertained for Mrs. Shouse's sub-debutante daughter, Miss Joan Dodd, and their son, William Shouse, and honor guests were four leading debutantes: The Misses Elysabeth Barbour, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Warren Barbour, of New Jersey; Louise Stillwell, daughter of Mme. Espil; Cynthia Dunn, whose parents are Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, and Sitz Finkenstaedt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt.

Hostess Marked Birthday

The occasion also happened to be Mrs. Shouse's birthday. But she had her real celebration at lunch, when her son and daughter surprised her with a big birthday cake.

Yesterday's guests were told to come in sports clothing for an afternoon of activity. The platform which Mrs. Shouse had installed for the carnival she gave last year was hung with lanterns, and there dancing took place to the music of Sidney's Orchestra. Just to be on the safe side, in case of rain, the hostess had borrowed from the Cuban Embassy its movable dance platform and had it set up in the big white barn.

Nondancers played various games, bridge or Chinese checkers on tables which were set up under the big trees on the lawn. Various dart-throwing games and other diversions were also on the schedule.

Mr. and Mrs. Shouse had invited a group of their own friends to join them at supper. But the majority of guests were young people. There were about 175 boys and around 50 of the season's debs as well as a sprinkling of post and sub-debs.

Also included were the house guests, Miss Ruth Robb, of Boston, who is visiting Miss Finkenstaedt; the Misses Louise Russell and Evelyn Sloane, guests of Miss Mildred Dunn; Miss Harriet Aldrich, guests of Miss Cynthia Dunn; Miss Isabel Paul, of Philadelphia, who is staying at the Argentine Embassy, and several others.

Plans Made For Carnival

Another outdoor party at Wolf Trap will be the carnival to be held there Friday night for the benefit of the Women's Institute of Professional Relations. Distinguished members of the Cabinet, members of Congress, and resident society are planning to be there in full force for an amusing evening.

Arthur Krock and Harold Hinton are conniving with a panel led by Mr. and Mrs. John O'Rourke to stump the guests with an "Information Please" program. Secretary of War Harry Woodring, Senator Arthur Vandenburg, Senator Alben Barkley and Senator James Byrnes already have been picked as victims.

Jim Berryman, jr., and Walter Karrig will do caricatures, and in the quietest corner will be the Screamorium-Breakorium, where you can give the Bronx cheer or the rebel yell, of just vent your particular hate by breaking things.

Supper will be served until 9 o'clock from a large stone fireplace, and featured will be kettles of Kentucky Burgoo and Virginia hams. Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Robert Jackson, Mrs. Thurman Arnold and several others have been charged with the duty of seeing that nobody goes hungry.

Garden Exhibition To Aid Church Fund

Mrs. Benedicta Regenstein, 3830 Tunlaw road, opened her gardens for a benefit silver tea yesterday from 4 to 7, sponsored by the Altar Society of St. Anne's Catholic Church, of which she is a member. Her home is located back of Mount Alto Hospital.

Proceeds of the affair will go to the building fund of the church. Guests had opportunity to view the rose arbor rock garden, lily pond and the terraced gardens.

Society to Meet

The State of Maine Society will meet tomorrow at 8:30 at the Wardman Park Hotel. This is the Club's last business meeting of the year. The appointment of committees for the coming year will be announced and movies of Maine and Florida will be shown.

To Receive

The President of George Washington University and Mrs. Cloyd H. Marvin will receive members of the graduating class of the university and their parents this afternoon from 5 until 7 o'clock at the Washington Club. There will be dancing.

Lucille Sanders, G. Frame Wed

The wedding of Miss Lucille Mae Sanders, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Marvin Sanders, of Forestville, Va., to George William Frame, of Washington, son of James Milton Frame, of Clifton Station, Va., and the late Mrs. Frame, took place at 7 o'clock last evening at the Andrew Chapel Methodist Church. The Rev. R. Carl Maxwell officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore white marquisette over satin, with Valenciennes lace trimming the sleeves and bodice and fashioned in ruffles on the skirt. Her full length veil was held in place by tiny white rose buds and lilies of the valley, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Harry J. Sherbondy, her sister, was matron of honor, gowned in orchid marquisette trimmed with velvet ribbon bows, and carrying an arm bouquet of garden flowers. Miss Amy Sanders, another sister, was maid of honor, and was attired like Mrs. Sherbondy. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary Sanders, a cousin, who wore green marquisette; Mrs. Martin Brown, who chose blue; Mrs. Thomas Bowler, who was in pink, and Miss Blanche Nichols, in yellow.

Little Miss Mary Jo Berry served as flower girl, wearing a long frock of pink marquisette trimmed in pink velvet ribbons, and carrying a basket of pink rose petals.

Maurice Frame was best man for his brother, and the ushers were Vernon Sanders, of McLean, Va.; Harry Sherbondy, of Arlington Village; Joseph Trammel, of McLean, and Alfred Cockrell, of Vienna, Va.

A reception at the bride's home followed the ceremony. Mrs. Sanders wore white lace with a corsage of red roses and the bridegroom's mother was in flowered dotted Swiss with a gardenia corsage.

After a honeymoon the couple will live in Washington.

District Group Attends Luncheon At Atwill Home

Several from Washington motored over to the Green Spring Valley near Warrenton yesterday for the luncheon given by Mrs. Lionel Atwill at her home there. Mrs. Atwill is the daughter of Mrs. Edward Stotesbury, who has been making her home here this year.

Included among the guests were the former Ambassador to Germany and Mrs. Hugh Wilson, Mrs. George T. Pettingill, wife of the Commandant of the Navy Yard; Clarence Hewes, Arthur Bradley Campbell, the Hon. Julian Chetwynd, and Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim.

Luncheon Honors Marcella Snyder

Mrs. Raymond Rogers and Miss Anne Donovan were cohostesses Saturday at a luncheon in the Madrillon, honoring Miss Marcella Snyder, of Washington and Baltimore. Miss Snyder's marriage to Charles Kein will be solemnized in Baltimore on June 22.

Among the guests were two other prospective brides, the Misses Kathryn Cross and Clara Rosenthal, whose weddings will take place in Washington this summer. EVERYTHING IS GOING smoothly in preparation for the Upperville Colt and Horse Show, the most important sporting event of the month in Virginia, which will be held Friday and Saturday.

The show grounds are looking clean swept and ready with fresh green brush jumps, newly whitewashed fences, hampshire hurdle paddocks for the horses, chairs placed on the grandstand and flags flying.

THE SHOW WILL BEGIN at 9:30 a. m. Friday with the showing of heavy draft classes, which are of such interest to the farmers in the community. One of the largest classes of the 25 to be called off is the Founder's Cup, to begin at 3:15. The silver cup is a lovely replica of those given when the show was started years ago. For horses bred and owned in Fauquier and Loudoun counties, 3-year-olds to jump three and a half feet, 4-year-olds and over to jump four feet. Blue ribbon winners over jumps in a show prior to 1940 not eligible.

Many parties will be given over the week-end—luncheons, teas, dinners and a dance after the show in Buchanan Hall, Upperville.

MISS CLARE BRIGGS and Baylor Metzger, who will be married Tuesday evening, June 18, in St. James Episcopal Church, Leesburg, are being handsomely entertained beforehand. Mrs. John Owen will give a ladies' luncheon and shower on Wednesday at her lovely home near Leesburg, and Mrs. LeFevre Luke will fete Miss Briggs at luncheon Friday.

Mr. Metzger will arrive from Chicago on Saturday, and that night Sterling Harrison, who will be best man, will give a bachelor dinner at his Leesburg home. After this, entertaining will begin in earnest.

MRS. WILLIAM A. MOFFATT, the former Peggy McNeale, of Washington, will be hostess at a breakfast for the couple at noon Sunday, at the Washington home of her mother, Mrs. Donald McNeale. Mrs. Frank Paul will give a supper for them Sunday at her home, Hillcrest, Leesburg, and on Monday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Winslow Williams have planned a cocktail party. That night the bridegroom's parents, Judge and Mrs. William A. Metzger, will be hosts at a large supper party at their Leesburg residence. On the day of the wedding Mr. and Mrs. William Donelan, jr., will entertain at cocktails for the bridal party and out-of-town guests.

WAVERLY TAYLOR, of Winchester, who belongs to the North Wales Club in Warrenton, entertained a number of his friends from the Capital there yesterday. It was quite a field day, with guests arriving shortly before noon and staying on for luncheon. Some of them hiked up through the lovely woods of the farm, others played golf, tennis, croquet, or threw horseshoes. Mint juleps and luncheon were served on the terrace, where the guests sat at a long table decorated with spring flowers.

Mr. Taylor gave a much talked-of and enjoyed party at the club last winter, when there was snow on the ground, and the guests went sleigh-riding, coasting and skating.

CAPITAL WHIRL

By SALLY SWIFT

ARRIVING AT THE Larz Anderson house for Elysabeth Barbour's debut ball Saturday night, I heard one gayety-exhausted debutante say to her escort, "I'm so tired that I hope this will be a dull party so I can tear myself away early."

At 4 o'clock in the morning I saw the same young lady doing a brisk conga to the strains of Earl Coleman's Orchestra, so you can judge for yourself what kind of an evening it turned out to be.

The Anderson house, now the headquarters of the Society of the Cincinnati, is a splendid setting for a ball. Though pleasantly filled, it was never crowded and, when tired of dancing people supped at small tables, sat in the garden, looked on from one of the many balconies, or wandered through the rooms admiring the objets d'art displayed as in a museum.

ELYSABETH BARBOUR and her mother made a lovely picture as they received their guests. They both wore lacy robes de style, Mrs. Barbour's black over white, and the debutante's white with touches of pale blue satin ribbon. Senator Barbour, putting aside for the moment the cares of state, was all benevolent pride in his two beautiful ladies.

Glimpsed among the merry-makers were Maisie Howard, down from Philadelphia; Harriet Aldrich, of New York, in pale green and white; charming Mildred Dunn and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. McKee Dunn; Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Glover, still being congratulated on their recent dance at Grasslands; Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, who leave for their summer home in Newport today; Snowden's daughter, Fontaine; Joan Dodd, twirling in practice for her picnic dance of the following day, and Peggy Lansdowne.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wilmer, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Auchincloss, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Carusi, James Clement Dunn, dancing with a blonde debutante; Mr. and Mrs. Russell MacGregor, Mr. and Mrs. Van Rensselaer Halsey, Mrs. Sidney Lee, Keith Officer, Ralph Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Perin, Anne Perin, Clem Conger, Harry Covington Hogan, Theodore Rousseau, Harold Fangboner and scores of others.

Earlier on Saturday, Mrs. Truxton Beale had entertained at a buffet luncheon in honor of four of the current debutantes, Zeva Fish, Pauline Curtis, Cynthia Dunn and Elysabeth Barbour.

The buffet table was placed under an arbor in the garden of historic Decatur House. During luncheon, plantation singers filled the garden with haunting melodies, to the great delight of the young guests. Equally enjoying the party was a small group of grownups keeping Mrs. Beale company at her table, among them Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, John Foster, Rafal Lepkowski and Jacques Du Maine.

Mrs. Beale's youngest guest was Subdeb Paulina Longworth, who accompanied her mother. Others were Sylvia Szechenyi, Nancy Glover, Louise Blair, Katherine and Priscilla Johnson, Winthrop Crane, Miguel Quirno-Lavalle, James Houghteling, jr., just home from Yale, with his house guest, Jack Hannaford; McCullough Darlington, Bobby Wilson and Jose de Lasa.

Another delightful party of a different type was Mrs. John Gross' recent dinner-dance for her daughter, Pauline Curtis. The scene was the garden of the 1925 F Street Club. Dinner for more than 100 was served with the elegance that everyone has come to expect at the club. The beautiful mise en scene was arranged personally by Mrs. Gross who had brought the Chinese lanterns that shone through the trees from New York's Chinatown. Low mounds of maidenhair fern and white tapers in crystal hurricane shades decorated each table, while the out-of-door dance floor was outlined with flowers and all the flower beds in the gardens were in bloom.

ONE OF THE BELLES of the party was Mrs. James Clement Dunn, who arrived a little late after the garden tea which she had given that afternoon for her daughter, Cynthia, and for Pauline Curtis. When the dancing started I heard one young man say to pretty Cynthia, "I'm delighted to see you but where is your mother?" a compliment which Cynthia appreciated more than one which he had paid her a moment before.

One of the loveliest gowns worn at Mrs. Gross' dinner was Mrs. Bliss' white creation strewn with little circles of white sequins with which she wore a single spray of pale blue flowers.

After the past week's festivities, Mrs. Robert Fell was one of the first to start the summer exodus when she left for Bermuda yesterday, taking her two children and her mother, Mrs. Reginald Barker, with her. She promises to come back later to spend part of the summer in town. Meanwhile, Mr. Fell has moved to the Metropolitan Club.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

Mrs. Nobody

Well it was over! She was a free woman again. She wouldn't have to go around any more bowing and smirking to touchy club members whose measure of a president was whether or not she was "nice" to them. She wouldn't have to kowtow to stuffy persons, wouldn't have to pretend cordiality to slippery ones she didn't respect. She wouldn't have to throttle her instinct and emotion constantly, turn herself into a sawdust Olympian in her efforts to be fair and just.

She wouldn't have to settle rows, worry over details neglected by committee chairmen, handle "difficult" personalities, spend sleepless nights over unpleasant incidents. She wouldn't have the club like a millstone around her neck 24 hours a day.

Yes, this was the moment for which she had longed, the moment when she would step down and hand the gavel and the responsibility and the work and the grief over to someone else. The moment toward which she had literally counted the minutes these last hurried, chaotic days. Yes it was here at last. And yet . . . yet, well, why did she have this queer flat feeling? As if she had been suddenly dropped from a balloon?

Why should she have suddenly felt so mousey and drab after the new president took the gavel? Or so forgotten and unnoticed after the meeting when everyone was pressing around the new officer? After all that was to be expected. And she had had her day.

Still . . it did seem that her closest friends might have been a little warmer. And not so many of the members have passed her with glazed, abstracted eyes. Yet why should people cluster around her anymore? She no longer was the hub of anything. No, thank Heaven she didn't want to be. After all, it was sort of nice to be an obscure person, again. What was it Emily Dickinson had said? "How dreary to be somebody."

Yet—to tell the truth, it hadn't been exactly dreary. In fact, it had been a lot of fun—especially the dressing up and the presiding . . . and the being consulted . . . and honored . . . and praised.

Yes, it really was going to be hard getting adjusted to being a nobody again. She could understand now how the Duke of Windsor just feel. And the Presidential families when they left the White House.

It was strange how people changed in their attitudes. What difference a job, or money or an office made. And would—would she have any real friends now? Oh yes, of course, some would stick. And the others—why after all the others didn't really matter! The thought was freshening, revelatory. Why that was the thing we all got down to sooner or later!

Then there was the family! Of course they would love her just the same! A wave of warmth toward them all—John, Junior, Betty, Grace, even Fluffy the dog—swept over her. They were all that really counted. And they didn't care whether she was president or past president. To them she was always and only—just herself.

Besides, there was herself—her good old self to fall back on. The self she'd go on living with to the end. Nothing would ever separate them. Nothing—so she trusted—would ever lessen their stimulating companionship, their mutual self respect.

A sudden sense of dignity, strength and security came over her. Why—why nobody was ever really a nobody! Nobody was ever really alone!

Gingerbread Stunts

Gingerbread usually is a man's idea of a dessert and a generous top spread of yellow cream cheese with a few sliced Brazil nuts in it will even increase interest. Or if you like, split the gingerbread and use the cheese-nut mixture as a filling. And plain whipped cream also does very well as an accompaniment. Gingerbread baked in muffin pans adds a lot of interest to the lunch boxes for the grown-ups as well as the youngsters.

Homemaker of the Future

One of the experiences of Jane Crampton, the 17-year-old Meridian, Miss., high school girl who won a trip to Washington as the national winner of the country-wide Urban Foods-Homemaking Contest, sponsored by Servel, Inc., was to help prepare a large beef roast in the kitchen of the House of Representatives. Jane, shown in the picture above, is carving the roast, making ready for lunching with Senator Pat Harrison and Representative Ross Collins of her home State

Meal Planning Prowess Wins Dixie Girl Award In Contest

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Food Editor.

WHEN a little girl, Jane Crampton, of Meridian, Miss., made mud pies, and also prepared real food on a little stove in her play yard.

Martha Ellyn

She borrowed her mother's baking powder, not exactly understanding why she used it, only that her mother always had splendid results. She cooked rice and fried Southern chicken and decorated cakes and cookies with colored icings. That was the beginning of what promises to be a very interesting career for Jane.

Several months ago Jane learned that Servel, Inc., was sponsoring an Urban Foods Project for high school students in cooperation with the Student Home Economist, a leading magazine in the home economics field. She joined the 8,000 students of 40 States to learn how to plan more intelligently and economically for well-balanced meals and the attractive service of them.

Worked Five Months

The project was so planned that the actual work was directly related to daily living and the many representative problems that arise in every normal household. From January 1 to May 1, 1940, Jane worked seriously on the project. But she told me she also had plenty of "fun." In her own words, she covered the food front from F to Z, and had a grand time doing it.

In recognition of her achievement Jane was awarded a week's trip to Washington, together with her teacher, Miss Helen Hawkins, to whom Jane gives a great deal of credit for her accomplishment. The People's Water and Gas Co. of Meridian, proud of Miss Crampton's achievement, is giving her a trip to New York City to see its great industries and also to attend the World's Fair.

Judges Laud Report

Nationally known home economists who were judges included Miss Joan Rock, director, School of Household Science and Art, Pratt Institute; Miss Jessie McQueen, home service councilor, American Gas Association, New York City; Miss Karen Fladoes, home service director, People's Gas Light & Coke Co., Chicago, and Miss Eleanor Howe, coeditor of the Student Home Economist. Representative Bruce Barton headed the panel.

When I inquired of Jane what dish she learned to make especially well during the project, she said that she considered a chocolate cake was one of her accomplishments. Here is her recipe:

Chocolate Layer Cake

Sift cake flour, measure to 2¼ cups and add 2¼ teaspoons baking powder, ¼ teaspoon salt and sift together three times. Cream ½ cup butter or other shortening. Add 1 cup sugar gradually, creaming until light and fluffy. Add 2 well-beaten eggs and beat well. Add the flour, alternately with ¾ cup milk, a small amount at a time, beating after each addition until smooth. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla. Bake in two greased 9-inch layer pans in moderate oven, 375 degrees, for 25 minutes. Spread caramel frosting between layers and over cake.

After Jane finishes high school next year, she hopes to follow her education with a home economics course, and then teach home economics. She wants to marry and put her home-finding facts into operation in her own home. And she thinks it would be great fun to be the mother of twins.

Beauty Secrets

By CAROLYN ABBOTT

Eye Make-up

ARE you using your eye make-up to best advantage? If so, you're the exception. The majority of women still regard eye beauty aids as toys, but there's more to eye make-up than keeping the eyebrows well groomed, lashes touched with mascara or eyelids darkened with eye shadow.

Correctly applied eye make-up can accentuate good points and minimize bad ones. Here are some sugestions for enhancing all types of eyes—especially those that might be a problem to the unitiated.

FOR EYES TWO WIDE APART—Keep eyebrows fairly close together and of normal thickness. Fill in toward nose with eyebeauty pencil and, if necesary, extend a bit beyond outer corner of eye. Apply shadette heavily on upper lips near nose. Blend upward halfway to brow and fade off three-fourths of way across eyelid. Concentrate mascara on lashes nearest nose.

FOR EYES TOO CLOSE TOGETHER—Keep brows wide apart and moderately heavy. Extend outer corner of eye, using pencil if necessary. Apply shadette near center of upper lid, blending up about halfway to brow and extend slightly beyond eyes. Apply mascara heavily to lashes toward temple.

FOR ROUND EYES—Make a slight peak well past center of eye. Lengthen natural line with pencil, using final short upward strokes. Apply shadow heavily and high at inner corners, blending lightly to outer corner where it should again be applied heavily. Apply mascara on extreme tips of lashes and at inner and outer ends of brows.

Good Luck Symbols For Weddings

We're upon the season of lovebirds, doves, orange blossoms and all the other pretty symbols of June romances. But there are several other oft forgotten symbols that we like to take out of the wrappings in which they've been so tenderly put away these many years.

A sprig of rosemary in the wedding wine, for instance, is said to bring happiness to the bride. While in old England, the honeysuckle was the flower of ardent lovers . . . in France this fragrant vine is still often called cher feu—dear flame. And in the time of Henry VIII it was good luck to dream of marigold—it meant health, wealth, success and a happy marriage. This gold flower was also known by the name of Souvenir and was worn sentimentally in nosegays with heartsease.

Trim Figure Held Indicator Of Efficiency

Root of Trouble Must Be Found to Solve Weight Problems

By Ida Jean Kain

THE WORLD has great pity for the chronic alcoholic who lets his craving for drink ruin his life and career. But it seems to have no concern whatever for the glutton who is committing slow suicide because he can't let food alone!

As a matter of psychology, it has been determined that the craving for food has its roots in the same dissatisfaction with life that makes a man turn to the cup that cheers. Like the alcoholic, he is seeking a means of escape.

This close parallel was brought home to me with a start by the change in an acquaintance who had lost a good job. Since he had been out of work he had turned to eating whenever he felt depressed and in a year's time he had gained 25 pounds—two pounds each month. Having been somewhat overweight to start with, this gain made a decided difference in his appearance—he looked like a much older man.

Lose Initiative

A job counselor once told me that he is inclined to regard normal weight and an erect posture as the outward signs of physical fitness and efficiency, and that he would always give preference to the personable applicant because he is convinced that a good appearance is indicative of mental alertness.

It is not always the lack of employment that sends people to overeating. Ia may be lack of money, an unhappy romance, or dissatisfaction with life in general. Take the woman who has very little spending money in her budget—when she feels depressed, she can't dash out and buy a new bonnet to cheer herself up, and she can't always afford money for diversions, but the icebox is usually handy and it is all too easy for her to turn to nibbling to assuage that feeling of unrest.

The psychological reason back of the craving for food all the time cannot always be tracked down, but it is usually there. The person whose time is interestingly occupied merely eats to keep going. He enjoys food, but is unlikely to overeat habitually. It's the person of restricted interests who finds eating a diversion.

When You're Tempted

When you are tempted to overeat, or crave a chocolate soda when you should be cutting down on calories, analyze the reason: Are you actually hungry or are you trying to escape from some nagging dissatisfaction in the back of your mind? If you had something very interesting to do, would you still crave food?

The only way to solve a weight problem is to get at the root of the trouble, and start from there. If it is from lack of anything else to do, get going as soon as your housework is done—don't stay home!

And if you are out of a job, taking on excess pounds isn't going to help you! When your morale is down and your will power flabby, the first thing to start getting you back in condition is a little daily exercise. I know, you think I drag in exercise as a solution to all problems. But I know its stringent effect!

There is nothing that will snap you out of a lethargy like toning up the musculature—if you keep the muscles in good tone, you are not as easily depressed. Well-toned muscles carry their own message to the brain that you are feeling fine. And you will be amazed at the tonic effect of exercise on the will power!

Avowedly in Love, Boy of 19 Neglects Sweetheart For Months at a Time; He Says It's to Keep From Becoming Too Serious; Girl Doubts Him

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 19 and very much in love with a boy the same age who says he loves me but behaves very strangely. We have known each other for four years and have gone together for ten months. For several months we were very happy. He was as much in love as I was. We discussed plans for the future, but realized that we were too young and financially insecure even to consider marriage for the present.

Then, out of a clear sky, he stopped coming to see me. He avoided me constantly for about a month. I had no idea what caused the sudden change and naturally I was very much hurt. Then he became attentive again and we picked up where we had left off. He offered no explanation and I asked no questions, so glad was I to have him back. Evidently this was a mistake, because after another two months, during which we were gloriously happy, he left again.

I heard rumors (later confirmed) that he was spending much time with a girl in whom he had been deeply interested two years before. I was heartbroken, but there was nothing I could do. So I went out with other boys in a vain effort to forget. This brought him back, as he has a very jealous nature.

This time he gave an explanation of his conduct. He said he couldn't afford to become serious, and when he realized he was getting serious, he thought it best to discontinue our relationship for a while. Although he seemed sincere, the explanation struck me as a very flimsy excuse.

My mother says he isn't worth the worry and anxiety I am going through. And while this probably is true, there seems to be nothing I can do to change my feelings. I have sincerely tried, and failed, to forget him. So, will you please give me some helpful advice? It will be greatly appreciated. M. T. E.

Boy's Explanation Has Ring of Truth

DEAR M. T. E.: I am inclined to accept the boy's "explanation" as an honest statement of the simple truth. Since he is only 19 and "financially dependent" besides (which probably means that he is parentally supported), he certainly can't afford to let some heart interest get the best of him.

The fact that you two are "gloriously happy" when together suggests that a powerful mutual attraction exists, and it is entirely likely that in trying to be protective of, and chivalrous toward you, his emotional control is more severely taxed at times than you realize. It very well may be that in dropping out of sight just when you seem most en rapport, he is running away from what he percieves to be the dangers of sustained propinquity. The logic of this assumption is indorsed by that significant ease with which you two are able to "pick up where you left off"—after an abrupt, overtly unwarranted rift, such as would permanently liquidate a flirtatious, shallow-rooted relationship.

By generously accepting his statement at face value, you will be going a long way toward curing your heartbreak, since heartbreak is nearly always a form of self-reproach. If what he says is true, you are not at all to blame for his periodic neglect. You have no cause for "worry and anxiety"—since his staying away is indicative of a more profound inward preoccupation with your charm than his casual and comradely courtship would be.

The latter type of attention usually means that a man feels in his heart that he can "take or leave" the girl in question. But the man who stays away intermittently, either to brood or to seek the contrast of other feminine companionship, yet jealously or involuntarily comes back time and again to the one girl, is paying that girl a tremendous, unconscious tribute. He is confessing by his actions that she is giving him trouble—that her pulling power is potentially greater than his will power.

So stop worrying about your beau. Don't try to forget him. Think of him as much as you wish—but tenderly, humorously and kindly. And keep to your latter-day pace of going with other admirers. Don't go with them for the purpose of "forgetting," however. Go with them for the rational and healthful purpose of having a good time; of having a continuous flow of gay new experiences, which will insulate your mind against unhappy speculations and your spirit against the intrusion of the gray ghost of loneliness.

By maintaining your emotional equilibrium in this fashion (even as the boy is trying to do), you will, at the same time, be reinforcing your already considerable appeal for him. And from your viewpoint, that is an important objective.

No man can abide a lovesick woman, and a man in love never loves so gratefully as when the woman of his choice—even while admitting her love for him—remains serenely or buoyantly self-possessed. Perhaps one of the reasons why this boy felt he had to step out of the picture was because you were too disturbingly clinging. And when he returned the second time, it may have been because he hoped he would find you in a more self-contained mood, better prepared to make things easier for both. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Summer Novelty Jewelry Is Light And Cool Looking

New York (AP).—Junk jewelry has taken a new lease on life.

That's because novelty manufacturers are doing a good job at creating new and different trinkets especially suitable to wear with summer clothes, and as different from the heavy jewelry of other seasons as a ski suit is different from a bathing suit.

The very newest summer jewelry has a wintry look. It simulates icicles, snowflakes, the frost on a windowpane. It is made of glass or of featherweight plastics. It looks cool, feels cool and is exactly right to wear with frothy summer dresses.

With sport things, you might wear lightweight plastic beads in white, pink or blue. Amber pieces worked in two colors, pale yellow and brown, look smart against summer's linen-colored suits.

Carved coral, another lightweight novelty, lends a sweet touch of color to white summer frocks. Imitation pearls, of course, are always with us, and pale pink ones compete for favor with regulation white.

Today's Health Talk

By Logan Clendening, M. D

Tobacco Is a Drug, May Be Harmful, But—So What?

There is no question that tobacco is a drug. And there is no question that as a habit its use is very common.

Those being undeniable facts, they arouse in different persons different reactions. Once when I wrote of some experiments made on the effect of tobacco on athletes' "wind," I received a letter from a Midwest college instructor saying he would no longer allow my writings to be read in his classrooms, as they heretofore had been, and that he was convinced from a study of his students that the use of cigarettes caused low grades of scholarship.

I feel that, intellectually, such a man shows that he does not know the nature of evidence. But he reveals one attitude of mind towards tobacco—the relentless reformer.

It's pretty hard to figure out, as G. K. Chesteron, the great English essayist, said, where there is any "moral issue" involved in smoking or not smoking at all. There is, in the use of alcohol and, of course, the narcotics. But not tobacco. And I think we ought to get that straightened out to begin with.

Then there is a large group of people who smoke and who are continuously worrying about whether it really does them any harm or not.

And there is a group which smokes and is convinced it does harm (without any very good evidence). But these enjoy it enough so they go on smoking anyway.

Then there is the vast majority who smoke and don't think very much about it one way or the other.

Grover Trylon Hall Didn't Mind Not Seeing First Lady Snip Ribbon

New York, June 9.

THE WRITER of this presmanaged to gum up the forent piece, Grover Trylon Hall, mal opening of the splendurgeous new Fashion Building at our World's Fair the other Saturday while his sturdy breadwinner, Miss Hughes, was helping preside over the elegant little theater on the premises.

Of course, we male impediments weren't allowed in the place while Madame F. D. R. was addressing the assembled girls over the luncheon table, but we bore up and some evil spirits sneaked off to the buttery bar in the British Building and had a couple of long ones. It was a piping day. We got back in time to see Madame Eleanor come out in dress-up clothes ready to cut the ribbon to open the building. Just a gag for the newsreels, of course, but it was the laugh of the day, at that. For when Madame was ready to snip, somebody piped up "anybody got a pair of scissors?" so everything was ready for making history but a pair of shears. Finally someone dug up some nail-nippers, and history was made.

The building is beautiful, and has lots of fine exhibits. My frau and pretty Gerrie Morris have staged a good short show (no nasty crack meant) in the theater, and there is a luscious fashion show twice daily in the garden restaurant. This will be an inducement if you want to drag father into the style our best, streamlined and joint, for the models are of haughty. But there are more catty jealousies in that building than in the Metropolitan Opera. You know how some girls are. Two of the nation's most famous beauticians are practically blood enemies, and one of them says she won't enter the building when "that woman" is in it. It's all in fun—we have our prestige to consider.

Broadway Loses Actors for War Service

SPOUSE ABOUT TOWN—What with Laurence Olivier and his pretty-lamb, Vivien Leigh, going back to England to do something, and our own Robert Montgomery piloting an ambulance in France, our entertainers are getting involved and scrambled. "Romeo and Juliet" was a costly failure on Broadway, and perhaps Vivvy and Livvy feel that war can't be much worse than those blasts of silence from a big, half empty theater. I hope Bob makes out all right.

18 Roosevelt Backers Named To Pick Convention Officials

3d-Termers Dominate Farley's Committee On Arrangements

By Cecil B. Dickson.
International News Service Staff Writer

Democratic Chairman James A. Farley yesterday appointed the committee on arrangements for the national convention and called the members to meet with him in Chicago on June 20 to prepare the program.

Of the 21 named, 18 definitely are committed to a third term and thus President Roosevelt's friends will dominate in the selection of the convention officials, including the keynoter and permanent chairman.

Farley, who is against a third term, however, retained the chairmanship, W. W. Howes, of South Dakota, former Assistant Postmaster General, and Oliver A. Quayle, jr., treasurer of the national committee, are the others listed as opposed to a third term.

Outlines Procedure

Simultaneous with Farley's announcement, Chairman John D. M. Hamilton, of the Republican National Committee, outlined procedure for the preconvention meeting of the G. O. P. resolution committee members-designate, which convenes in Philadelphia, June 17. The convention opens seven days later.

First sessions of the group, Hamilton said, would be devoted to organization. On the second day he proposed that the committeemen meet with Dr. Glenn Frank, chairman of the Republican program committee, and the nine regional chairmen of that group for a discussion of data on which the program committee's report entitled "A Program For a Dynamic America" was based.

On June 19, according to Hamilton's suggestions, the committee would hear various groups and individuals interested in certain planks in the platform. This would leave the committeemen four days to draft a preliminary platform.

Farley will confer this week with President Roosevelt to learn whom he wants to be Democratic keynoter and permanent chairman. At a conference some time ago, Mr. Roosevelt indicated to Farley that he wanted Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky the keynoter in 1932 and 1936, to be the permanent chairman.

Recently, however, reports have reached leading Democrats that Mr. Roosevelt, whose acceptance of a third-term nomination is taken as a foregone conclusion, wants a new slate of officials at the national convention.

Byrnes Mentioned

Mr. Roosevelt had indicated to some intimates that Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, mentioned as a possible running mate, would be acceptable as keynoter. Speaker Bankhead of the House declined a bid to make the keynote speech, since he also has Vice Presidential aspirations.

Mr. Roosevelt caused speculation about his running mate by having as his guest on the yacht Potomac over the week-end, Associate Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court. Douglas is a liberal, former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and, although a Westerner, now hails from Connecticut. He has the backing of the New Dealers.

All talk of Farley or Vice President Garner being on the ticket has silenced, since White House intimates disclosed that Mr. Roosevelt plans to accept a third term on the condition that he can name his running mate to whom he will turn over the reins of the Government after the present war crisis ends.

Farley told friends that he would open the Democratic convention in Chicago July 15, but that he would retire as chairman unless expressly requested to stay by President Roosevelt. Farley and Mr. Roosevelt have been on the outs for two years and New Dealers have been after "geniel Jim's" scalp for almost that long. The hatchet, however, has been buried pending the convention and the reorganization of the national committee for the third term campaign.

Mr. Garner is preparing to return to his Uvalde, Tex., home, and does not plan to go to the Chicago convention, despite the fact that the Texas delegation of 46 is pledged to him. Garner apparently has no ambition to be a third term Vice Presidential candidate.

Farley's Appointments

That the convention machinery will be in the complete hands of Mr. Roosevelt's friends, was shown by Farley's appointments to the arrangements committee. Besides Farley, Howes and Quayle, the anti-third termers, those favoring a third term are:

L. W. "Chip" Robert, jr., of Georgia, secretary of the national committee; Edwin A. Halsey, secretary to the Senate; Mrs. Lucretia del Valle Grady, of California, wife of Assistant Secretary of State Henry F. Gradey; David Fitzgerald, Connecticut; Patrick Nash, Illinois, one of the partners in Chicago's Kelly-Nash machine; Lynn Brodrick, Kansas; Senator A. B. "Happy" Chandler, Kentucky.; Edmund Shields, Michigan; James C. Quigley, Nebraska; Miss Helen N. Hanson, Maine; Calvin W. Rawlings, Utah; C. E. Boughton, Wisconsin; Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Pennsylvania, wife of an Interstate commerce commissioner and sister of Senator Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania; Edward A. Carroll, Washington; Mrs. Mildred R. Jaster, Ohio; Edward J. Flynn, New York; Mrs. Lyon Childress, Tennessee, and John P. Erickson, Minnesota.

Guard Rights In War Crisis, Labor Is Told

Conference on Civil Liberties Plans U. S. Reform Group

The three-day National Conference on Constitutional Liberties in America closed its sessions yesterday at the National Press Club auditorium by forming a National Federation for Constitutional Reform. This organization, it was announced, is "to coordinate on a national scale the activities of civil rights and labor groups in various parts of the country."

Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board, speaking at a luncheon which closed the conference, urged labor to make no sacrifices to further the national defense program.

"When a country embarks on a defense program on a scale and with an intensified effort which resembles the atmosphere of wartime," he said, "labor has every reason to make sure that its own economic and civil rights will not be lost in the shuffle."

"The need," he said, "is for vigilance, for patience, for courage and out fear, and said "already the spirit of mass fear leading to attacks on civil rights is rising."

"The need," he said, "is for vigilance, for patience, for courage and for appeals to the reasonable inclinations of men to barricade their minds against the whirlwinds of hysterical fear. The motives of those who use patriotism as a cloak for selfishness must be unceasingly exposed. Those who from panic or more sinister motives would substitute mob violence for the orderly processes of government must submit to the prompt restraints of law."

Smith said the two "major problems" ahead of "those who would fight to keep American democracy intact." These he identified as: first "and primarily" to keep the United States out of the war; second, "to make sure that the national defense program itself does not become an instrument by which, short of war, the forces of reaction can succeed in striking vital blows at democracy."

Forum Thrown Into Uproar By Demand U. S. Enter War

Col. Breckinridge, Member of Wilson's Cabinet, Urges Declaration; Lundeen, Maas, Van Zandt Condemn Aid for Allies

Two Senators and three Congressmen, engaged in a fiery radio debate over the sale of American arms to the Allies, last night heard President Wilson's Assistant Secretary of War shout a demand for an immediate American declaration of war upon Germany.

Col. Henry Breckinridge, who held the War Department post from 1913 to 1916 and later was a member of the American Expeditionary Force general staff, raised a tumultuous roar, half applause and half boos, from the audience of 500 when he cried:

"I am convinced that every nation in the Western Hemisphere should declare war upon Hitler immediately and destroy him!"

Tempers Explode

Breckinridge supported Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, and Representative May (Democrat), of Kentucky, chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, in their plea for the sale of "surplus" Army and Navy planes and other equipment to England and France.

The debate, broadcast over a coast-to-coast network by the American Forum of the Air, approached in its fury the sound of a battlefield as the arms sale proposal was denounced by Senator Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota; Representative Van Zandt (Republican), of Pennsylvania, and Representative Maas, of Minnesota, ranking Republican member of the House Naval Affairs Committee.

Again and again Chairman Theodore Granik sought to quiet the audience in the Willard Hotel and restore order as tempers exploded and the six members of the panel leaned across the table, all yelling angrily at once.

Bitterly Condemn President

Lundeen, Van Zandt and Maas bitterly condemned the President for ordering the "trade-in" of American fighting planes to private companies for resale to the Allies.

"In one breath," Lundeen declared, "Mr. Roosevelt says that we have no adequate defense, and in the next breath he strips us of our fighting planes, guns and war materials for the dearly beloved King of Great Britain and the Emperor of India.

"Let us not be deceived. Damaged, deteriorated and obsolete war materials are not acceptable to Great best bombers and our finest aircraft bombers and our finest aircraft are being released for service to the British King.

"There is no use to camouflage this bloody business by which we are being led, step by step, into final, total war."

"Best" County Possesses

Maas stated that as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee he knew that the 50 Navy planes "traded in" Thursday were "the finest, best dive bombers the country possessed."

"Nothing better," he added, "has even been designed."

In the face of charges that his proposal means the destruction of American defense, Senator Pepper argued that the United States must provide the Allies with the arms to win the war or face the necessity, after a German victory, of arming to the teeth. He added:

"All America knows that we cannot, rich as we are, carry incalculable burdens of armament."

May, denying that America's armed forces "are in as bad shape as some people seem to believe," urged all aid short of war for the Allies, "because France and England are fighting for the principles in which we believe, and because if Hitler wins, we will have to spend billions on arms to insure ourselves against attack."

Profiteers Assailed

Van Zandt former national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, pointed out that he, Maas and Lundeen had served in the ranks in the World War and understood the grim horrors of armed conflict. He invited the panel to visit the nearest veterans hospital and see the broken, down, shrapnel-torn figures there before leading the country into war again.

Riotous applause, the most enthusiastic of the evening, followed his charge that "the men who want this country to be plunged into war are the hundreds of thousands of profiteers who coin money out of the blood of our youth."

Lundeen, condemning Gen. Pershing for kneeling down before the King of England to be knighted, received a heated response from Breckinridge, who termed Pershing's receipt of the title "a token of honor, not shame."

"I think otherwise," Lundeen rapped back.

Roosevelt to See Allies-Aid Group

A delegation of prominent New Yorkers will call on President Roosevelt at noon today to urge all possible aid to the Allies, the Washington Branch of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies reported last night.

At 11:30 a. m. a similar delegation from Baltimore, headed by Daniel Willard, railway president, will present a petition bearing names of 2,700 Marylanders to Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, asking his support of efforts to aid the Allies.

Strong Ideals Needed Today, Students Told In Series of Commencement Sermons

Graduation Speeches Stress Self-Sacrifice, Religious Outlook

Graduating classes were urged in baccalaureate sermons here yesterday to dedicate themselves to ideals demanded by the crucial international situation.

"The demand today is for a freshening and deepening of the moral conscience," said Bishop James E. Freeman at Washington Cathedral last night in his sermon for the George Washington University.

Telling the graduates that "this is a different kind of commencement" and that they are "entering upon a new world," he spoke of the dangers of unpreparedness in an individual and in a nation.

"What ever the outcome of the present war, the world of the future will not be the kind of world which we have hitherto known," declared the Rev. Dr. William J. Lallou in the baccalaureate sermon at the Catholic University, urging courage to meet the problems of the future.

"But," he said, "the one kingdom which will remain secure is the kingdom of Christ the King . . . Neither the swastika nor the hammer and sickle will replace the cross in the world of tomorrow any more than the crescent supplanted the cross when the Turks penetrated Europe even to the gates of Vienna."

Dr. Lallou, who is associate professor of sacred liturgy, spoke in the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

"No other commencement season in all the history of America has seen a more dangerous, decisive and momentous time,' said Dr. R. H. Miller, pastor of the National City Christian Church, in the baccalaureate sermon for Southeastern University.

"The soft decade of self-expression and self indulgence has passed, and we are in the midst of one of the greatest periods of dedication and self-sacrifice that the world has ever seen," he said.

The Rev. Wilfrid Parsons, S. J., in a sermon at the one hundred and forty-first annual baccalaureate mass at Georgetown University, warned the graduates that they are facing "the darkest of times in the history of the modern world."

Father Parsons, dean of the University's Graduate School, said that in the uncertainty and strife of the present world, the youth of the Nation must test their spirit of sacrifice.

Dr. Bernard Braskamp, pastor of Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, in the sermon for the Washington College of Law last night, said:

"I believe we are turning one of the great bends of history. And we are beginning to realize that the temple of civilization cannot be built by intellect alone, but that the builders must have 'heart education.'

"Furthermore we are beginning to understand that freedom and self-discipline are inseparable, and the Nation and the individual never gain strength of character until they learn and practice the fine art of self-discipline."

Dr. M. C. Stith, pastor of Brookland Baptist Church, in the graduation address yesterday at Columbia College of Christian Education, said:

"The hope of the resumption of normal affairs between nations lies in the individual regeneration of man."

The Columbia College of Christian Education awarded certificates to 120 students, with a smaller group receiving bachelor of theology degrees.

Bishop Stamm Dedicates New Church Unit

Special Rites Held At Evangelical Edifice, Fourth Street

Modern Christians' manifold "rising opportunities" for service were pictured here last night by Bishop John S. Stamm, addressing dedication ceremonies for Albright Memorial Evangelical Church's new $30,000 unit at Fourth and Rittenhouse streets northwest.

Many of those opportunities exist in the needs growing out of the present conflict abroad, the head of the Eastern area of the Evangelical Church told a large audience.

Stating that there were also opportunities in the clarification of issues, the prelate said that "whatever form of government may emerge from the present struggle, there will be a need for greater emphasis on the rights of personalities."

Earlier in the service, members of the Administrative Council, led by Samuel Stewart, president; other organization officials; Dr. George E. Schnabel, pastor, and other members of his congregation took part in the dedicatory ritual.

The new unit includes a recreational hall, men's clubroom, minister's study, young people's classroom, roberoom, modern kitchen and other features. The dedication banquet will be tomorrow at 7 p. m. 7 p. m.

Other members of the building committee are:

A. B. Lowstuter, architect; Edward Turner, Jack Osborne, Emmet Jester, Mike Bunke, Dewey Gardner, Frank Binks, Harry Garner, William McKenney, Roy Niswonger, Wilbert Snyder, Herman Mielke, James Titsworth, George Prevost, Elwood Spalding, Mrs. Harry Lohmeyer, Mrs. Vernon Buppert, the Rev. George Schnabel, Mrs. Samuel Stewart, Miss Olive Long, George Corbin, Mrs. Edward Turner, Mrs. Roy Niswonger, Vernon Buppert, Allen Richey, Edgar Hamilton.

Quesenberry, of Washington, received a medal for being one of five best-drilled privates.

Looted Safe in Mud

Because the water was low in the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal opposite 4400 block of Canal road northwest yesterday, police found evidence of a safe robbery.

Seventh Precinct police found a rifled 15-inch safe imbedded in mud bearing the trade mark "Value Vault." It had been submerged for some time, officers said.

Visitors Hurl Bricks

A hail of bricks greeted Israel Hunter, colored, 41, of 462 Ridge street northwest, early yesterday when he opened his front door in response to a knock.

The victim was taken to Freedmans Hospital where he was treated for several fractured ribs. He told police he recognized one of his brick-tossing assailants as a man with whom he once had an argument.

D. C. Victim Identifies Assailant

W. E. Gladstone Says Convicted Baltimore Convict Robbed, Shot Him

By Alfred E. Lewis
Post Staff Writer

The victim of a holdup-shooting here, who was critically wounded and robbed of $700, has "positively" identified a gunman convicted for a similar crime in Baltimore, as one of his assailants, The Post learned last night.

Leaving the hospital for the first time since he was shot March 16 during a District crime wave, William E. Gladstone, 45, of 6115 Fifth street northwest, accompanied District detectives to the House of Correction at Jessups, Md., last Friday, and there picked out the man who he said is the trigger-man, from a line-up of prisoners.

Identified by Gladstone, according to police, was a 22-year-old Washington man, who is serving five years in connection with the holdup and shooting in Baltimore. Implicated as the second bandit, police said, was a 28-year-old District resident, also serving five years for the Baltimore felony.

Convicts Deny Crime

The two convicts denied being guilty of the Gladstone robbery. Detective Sergeants Elmer Lewis and Paul Ambrose, who have been working on the case for three months, made a checkup trip to North Plainfield, N. J., and found the alibis false, according to police. Presentments against the two bandits in connection with the Gladstone case will be made before a District grand jury today, police said.

The convicted bandits were arrested here last April 16 on request of Baltimore police who wanted them for investigation in a shooting and the robbery of five taverns. At the time, police said, the two were suspected as being the Gladstone assailants, but Gladstone was so critically ill that he was unable to leave his hospital bed to make an identification.

Shot, Robbed March 16

Gladstone, a collector for the Try-Me Bottling Co., was shot in the abdomen March 16 and robbed of $700 by two men. He had just left a liquor store at 2725 Bladensburg road northeast and was waiting for a traffic light at Thirtieth street when one bandit got in beside him and shoved a gun against Gladstone's side.

When the startled Gladstone moved, the bandit, apparently taking the movement for resistance, fired the pistol. Then, seizing the collector's money, the gunman sprang to his own car, driven by an accomplice, and fled. The wounded man managed to drive his auto to a filling station at 2712 Bladensburg road, and collapsed.

Police officials last night declared that Gladstone's identification virtually left only two major 1940 crimes unsolved after the wave of lawlessness that continued from January through April.

Two colored men have confessed the holdup-slaying of Herman Sirkis, former policeman who operated a liquor store at 4824 Deane avenue northeast and who was killed by bandits February 26. During the crime epidemic several men admitted faking holdups and pocketing large sums, and several bandits were captured by special police patrols after gun battles.

Still to be solved are the $1,100 holdup of a finance company and the $1,300 robbery from a Georgetown collector.

Robbed of Safe, $500

Slugging the night attendant of the gas station and taxicab office at 1731 Kalorama road northwest, early yesterday morning, two bandits somehow made off with a 300 pound safe containing more than $500 in receipts.

William Taylor, colored, of 2219 N street northwest, told police he was dozing in his automobile in front of the station when the door of the car was suddenly jerked open and he faced a nickel-plated revolver.

Taylor said the bandits, who wore handkerchiefs over their faces, ordered him into the lavatory and one of the men struck him on the head with the butt of the gun.

When he recovered from the blow, Taylor said, his pocketbook containing $1 was missing as well as the 3-foot oron safe.

Jason Maloney, colored 26, of 626 N street northwest, told police he was robbed of a quart of whisky and $8 when he attempted to deliver the beverage and change for $10 on a telephone order to 1720 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Several Gang Victims

Edward Stewart, 19, of 2020 Colorado road northwest, reported he was set upon and robbed of $4 by seven or eight colored boys 15 to 20 years old late Saturday at First and Defrees streets northwest. He is an ice cream store clerk.

While he was held by a colored man, his $25 wrist watch was stripped from his arm by the man's woman companion, Robert Hall, colored, of 210 Balls court northwest, reported. The robbery took place in the 900 block of Fourth street northwest.

James Edison, colored, 16, of 1624 Mount Rainier avenue, Mount Rainier, Md., was held up by a colored man in the first block of O street northwest and robbed of $15. A purse snatcher escaped with the pocketbook of Mabel White, of 4828 Linnean avenue northwest. The purse contained 17 cents.

Defender Plan Merits Argued In Symposium

Legal Experts Air Pros and Cons in Bars Radio Forum

Establishment of a public defender's office to represent indigent persons in courts of the District was advocated as "equal justice to all" and condemned as similar to totalitarian criminal systems by Washington legal experts in a radio symposium yesterday.

James R. Kirkland, professor of criminal law at George Washington University, and Francis W. Hill, jr., president of the District Bar Association, called for creation of such an office to obtain equal justice for rich and poor alike.

A former president of the District Bar Association, F. Regis Noel, declared the proposal would make Washington's system of criminal laws "almost identical with those of Russia, Germany and Italy." Being political appointees and seekers of personal glory, public defenders "will defend only the cases that they are certain of winning and will plead the others guilty; it's human nature," he said.

Russell Hardy, former special assistant to the Attorney General, declared "this office ought not to be created until the existence of evils is clearly established by specific facts and there is an assurance that the new system will be better than the old."

The present system of courts' assigning defense counsel "indiscriminately" to indigent defendants, declared Kirkland, "has proven unsatisfactory."

"Assigned counsel, with limited time and a lack of investigating assistants, are greatly handicapped in trial preparation," Kirkland said. He asserted public defenders have proven to be economical as well as efficient in six States and 13 large cities, including Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Columbus and St. Paul.

"There are only a few lawyers who specialize in the field of criminal law," said Hill. "The result is that lawyers who are excellent in civil cases are frequently appointed to defend in criminal cases.

Church Group Finishes 12 Years' Service

Luther Place Class Now Forms Part Of Gleaners' Class

A dozen years of Christian service as an individual group was climaxed last night for the Builders' Class of Young Women of Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle.

The organization, which recently combined with the Mary and Martha and Dorcas Young Women's classes to form the new Gleaners' Class, held its farewell dinner at the Continental Hotel.

Miss Jo Schwarzenstein, president of the Builders, presented Mrs. Mabelle Thornton, retiring teacher, with a traveling bag on behalf of the class. Responding, Mrs. Thornton said she felt assured the girls would carry on in the new class with characteristic loyalty.

Later in the program, the classwomen heard an inspirational message from the Rev. Carl W. Folkemer, new assistant pastor of Luther Place. Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor, was toastmaster; Mrs. Gould Wickey, Gleaners' teacher, gave the invocation, and several members rendered special music.

Among the guests were Mrs. Carl Rasmussen, whom Mrs. Thornton succeeded as teacher four years ago; Miss Ann Lynn, and Mrs. Howard Tucker, charter member of the Builders. Mrs. Irving Koch, original teacher, was unable to attend.

Youth Council Rally Starts Here Today

Series of Meetings Will Stress Aid To Jobless Young

The Washington Youth Council will open a week of demonstrations today in hopes of selling Congress the idea of passing the American Youth Act at this session.

A series of meetings presenting first hand testimony of underprivileged young people and speeches by Senator Murray (Democrat), of Montana, and John P. Davis, of Washington, executive secretary of the National Negro Congress, have been arranged in support of the act to provide a program of vocational guidance and training for the Nation's youth.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, it was announced, will be toastmaster at the council's annual dinner at 8 p. m. Friday at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest, where Murray, who introduced the act in Congress, and Davis will speak.

At 8 p. m. tonight at the Y. W. C. A., District young people who seek employment or further education will relate their experiences to a panel of local Youth Agency leaders.

They will tell what the underprivileged young people of Washington face when they try to find a job to the panel, consisting of Arthur Miller, director of the National Youth Administration for the District; Miss Marie Curley, of the District Employment Center; E. A. Drumm, of the Y. M. C. A.; Miss Dorothy Height and Miss Phyllis Wheatley, of the Y. W. C. A.; Hugo Wolter, of the Council of Social Agencies, and a representative of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

A "youth legislature" to consider a wide range of youth problems, outline a course of action to support the American Youth Act and discuss jobs, peace, civil liberties and education will be held Saturday at the Y. W. C. A. Sessions will be held from 2 to 5 and 7 to 10 p. m.

3 Killed, 14 Injured In Accidents

Fleeing Thief Dies Under Streetcar; Hiker Drowned As Auto Upsets

One man was killed by a streetcar, another was drowned when an automobile overturned in a Calvert, Md., swamp, a third died in a Prince Georges, Md., truck crash, and 14 others were injured in District traffic yesterday, 3 by streetcars and buses.

The Washington victim was an unidentified colored man, who died at Freedmen's Hospital of injuries received Saturday night when he snatched a woman's pocketbook and dashed into the path of a car at Thirteenth and U streets northwest. His death was the twenty-fifth in Washington traffic this year, compared with 39 at this date in 1939.

Pinned beneath the automobile on which he had hitch-hiked a ride, Roland I. Keller, 21, of Baltimore, was drowned in a swamp near Prince Frederick, Md., when the machine struck a post and rolled over early yesterday. He was a member of the Naval Reserve attached to Eagle Boat 56 at North Beach.

James Middelton, colored, 18, of Naylor, Md., was killed last night when a truck in which he was riding overturned on the Aquasco road near Brandywine, Md. Another passenger, James Savoy, colored, 35, received head injuries. Prince Georges County police said the vehicle was operated by Emory L. Spencer, colored.

Companions Hurt

Injured in the crash which proved fatal to Keller were his two companions, Eugene McDonough and Carl Frederick, both 17, of Baltimore, who were removed to Marine Hospital at Baltimore after treatment at Calvert County Hospital. Maryland State Trooper C. F. Schleuter said the trio had hitch-hiked a ride with John R. Sens, 19, of Arlington, Va., and were standing on a running board when the accident occurred.

Four young men inside the machine were not hurt. Schleuter filed a charge of reckless driving against Sens.

Patrick A. McMahon, 72, of 1374 G street southeast, suffered a skull fracture and lacerations when he was struck by a street car at Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast. Police said the car was operated by Andrew J. Drew, 35, of 433 Fifth street southeast.

Pedestrian Struck

Another streetcar victim was Paul Sydell, 67, of 613 C street northwest, who was struck at Fourteenth and E streets northwest while, according to police, he was crossing against a red traffic light. He suffered multiple bruises. Police said the car was operated by Howard C. Robinson, 25, of 710 Nineteenth street northwest.

John L. Joy, 39, of 1312 L street southeast, received a contusion of the right knee and bruises when he was struck by a bus at Ninth and K streets southeast. Police said the operator was Dudley N. Willett, 32, of 1639 Hobart street northwest.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

U. S. Navy Gets Its Turn Before 'Time' Cameras

'U. S. Navy, 1940,' Documentary News' Next; Catholic U. Plans Busy Theatrical Summer; This, That and the Other About the Theater

THE ALERT AND INFORMATIVE "March of Time" seems again to have hit the bullseye of popular interest. Its next issue will be devoted to "The United States Navy—1940" and will survey thoroughly the present status and projected future development of the Nation's ships and men.

BELL

The record will go back to the historic Washington Naval Disarmament Conference and the 20-year naval "holiday," under which, the film will show, the United States scrapped more than 500-000 tons of ships, including unfinished cruisers and dreadnaughts upon which hundreds of millions of dollars already had been expended. Then it will go to show that since 1931 and Japan's invasion of China, which began the era of international lawlessness that led to the current war, this country has been rebuilding its Navy. It will be pointed out that since 1933 the people of the United States have spent $4,500,000,000 for the construction of 130 new ships and maintenance of the general naval establishment. It will observe, parenthetically, too, that they still must spend many billions more.

Although Congress has just appropriated fabulous sums to make the United States Navy the greatest in the world, it will take many years to translate that money into armament, ships and planes. "But even now in 1940," "Time" observes hearteningly, "military experts agree that the United States Navy has no equal."

If we only had two of them!

Tonight is the night when patrons get another crack at the Capitol Theater's "Jackpot"—the new radio quiz game, engineered from the stage by Walter Compton, of Station WOL. At last week's inauguration of this new form of the popular I. Q. test, approximately 50 members of the audience were given opportunities to pull down the cash awards, which pile up until the last correct answer, preceding a miss, hits the jackpot. Every correct answer wins a cash prize, whether it cops the accumulated jackpot or not.

It is a noteworthy summer theatrical season that has been charted by the Speech and Drama Department of Catholic University, under the direction of Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, O. P. The season will open on July 2 and 3, with Sara Allgood in "The Far-Off Hills." Miss Allgood, last seen locally at the National in the late Sidney Howard's posthumous play, "Madam, Will You Walk," will come to Washington for her first nonprofessional appearance since the Broadway critics showered her with encomiums for her work in "Juno and the Paycock."

The hot-weather agenda also will include Moliere's "The Miser," on July 11; Leo Brady's latest piece, "Calidore," a play in verse—which will be scouted by both Broadway and Hollywood—on July 18; The Children's Theater of the University in its play, July 25; Walter Kerr's new play, "Art and Prudence," a satire on professional drama schools—also to be looked over by the scouts—on August 1 and 2, with a guest star from the Coast, and, to end the season, William Saroyan's "My Heart's in the Highlands," on August 8.

It is my erstwhile pinch-hitter, Jerry Gross, who drops the helpful word that Adolfo Arias, nephew of the Ambassador from Ecuador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, who is in Washington for a few days to attend the graduation of his sister, Marcella, from National Park College, is under contract to make a picture for Monogram, also to dance in a musical comedy to be staged in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other West Coast cities, preliminary to New York. Young Arias—"a handsome devil, resembling Robert Taylor"—graduated from Georgetown Prep School in 1938 and entered Stanford University the following fall. Last November he dance-directed, sang and danced in the "Stanford Gayeties" and was immediately grabbed by a studio talent scout.

Dots and Dashes

This is the real McCoy. Clyde, of that name, will bring his Sugar Blues Orchestra to Loew's Capitol to headline the stage bill, beginning Friday . . . That means a jitterbug jubilee at the first show . . . A Roxyette can't go on forever without a little respite, so Managing Director Harry Anger is giving the gals leave, two at a time, effective now . . . Always 16 in the line, but two of them will be new to you each week now, for a spell . . . incidentally, the Roxyettes' "Red Cross" number this week is a local creation, with lyrics by Earl Nash and assists from other Red Crossers . . . Today at 12:45, the ladies and gentlemen of the press (sic) will preview "Slightly Honorable," next on the Earle screen—tomorrow at noon, "The Mortal Storm," following "Lillian Russell," if that is who it is, at Loew's Palace . . . Representative Claude Parsons, of Illinois, and Representative Harry Englebright, of California—the one a Democrat, the other a Republican—will be the official bellringers to open the Roadside Theater's season tonight . . . The competitive clanging may go on for hours—or until somebody is nominated.

Signs-of-the-Times Note

Eton Boys Register Hit At the Atlas

Radio's famous Eton Boys closed the matinee on the Atlas stage yesterday afternoon in a fashion never seen in the Northeast house before. Their own inimitable style of harmony swing singing took the customers by storm, and was only exceeded by their unique brand of comedy. Their repertoire included "Playmates" and such immortal favorites as "Old MacDonald Had a Farm," and the like.

Another favorite brought back by popular demand was Paul Rich, dubbed the "Wizard of the Harmonica" by most "name" band leaders.

As usual, Leon Brusiloff's "Music Masters," led by Sparty Donato, held sway on the stage and played a medley of Irving Berlin's hits, featuring Charley Murray, clarinetist! Meyer Ratner, on the violin, and trombone.

The double-feature screen attraction was comprised of Mickey Rooney as "Young Tom Edison" and Humphrey Bogart in "The Return of Doc. X."

Sing sessions, participated in by the audience, have become a regular Atlas feature, accompanied by Sparty's boys.

Stage Slave

Director Lloyd Bacon made his debut in the entertainment world as a Nubian slave in a stage production of "Salome."

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 9.

MORE THAN a generation ago, a librarian working at the N. Y. Public Library was among the first to recognize the talents of a new German writer named Thomas Mann. She arranged for his books to be purchased and displayed in prominent sections of the library, and took pride in his eventual fame . . . They had something in common, too, that young, German thinker and Sally Farrar, the pretty Manhattan librarian—for they were born on the same day, same year . . . A few days ago Thomas Mann and Sally Farrar celebrated their sixty-fifth birthdays. Mrs. Farrar's son, John, is a publisher now, partner in the firm of Farrar & Rinehart. That firm recently published a new book called "The Lights Go Down." It was written by Erika Mann, daughter of Thomas Mann.

THE BRITISH government has countermanded its order for Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh to return to London. The stars are standing by, for new orders . . . Al Smith is willing to serve on any committee to aid the defense co-ordinators, if he is asked—because he supports the President's foreign policy . . . Cornell Law School has notified its alumni that F. B. I. is increasing its staff because of recent developments, and suggested the filing of applications.

SOME AMERICANS have been receiving unusual souvenir ash trays from London. They're in the form of a shell case, made of steel, taken from the Berengaria, whose scrap-iron has been converted into ammunition . . . The inscription on these shell-case trays reads: "Berengaria, the ex-S. S. Imperata, Built in Germany, 1913 . . . Returned to Germany, 1940."

BECAUSE SO FEW foreign vessels now stop at American ports, dope addicts no longer can get supplies. The present supply of heroin sold has been cut, in quality, to a low of seven-tenths of 1 per cent, and so now most of the addicts are volunteering for cures. This is the war's first benefit—the elimination of the dope evil . . . The radio companies will get a rate adjustment from the phone companies.

DR. EDWARD KASNER, professor of mathematics at Columbia, is the author of a new book, "Mathematics and the Imagination." Wednesday, Dr. Kasner, wearing a cap, visited the new glass penthouse of his publishers, Simon& Schuster. He was shown through the offices by Jerome Weidman who, pointing to the glass walls and the most modern improvements, said: "You are now looking at the best offices in the whole civilized world." . . . "In the whole civilized world?" replied the professor. "Oh, well—that narrows the field considerably."

LARRY ADLER, the harmonica player, and Paul Draper, the dancer, will give a joint concert at the Broadhurst Theater next month . . . Harold Rome, whose song, "Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones," may be the third term campaign song, will have to make quick revisions in his "Pins and Needles" songs. Because Mussolini may enter the war shortly, Rome's "Four Little Angels of Peace"—in which Il Duce is shown as a peacemaker—must be changed. The "Papa Lewis-Mama Green" number will soon be out, also, because the ILGWU, producer of the show, is rejoining the A. F. of L. The "Stay Out of It, Uncle Sam" finale also will be eliminated.

SEC COMMISSIONER Leon Henderson, who was named as one of the seven members of the defense council, went to Swarthmore last week for the twentieth reunion of his class. His classmates carried a banner: "Wall Street may be afraid of Leon Henderson—but we are not. We know him as 'Dud'" . . . Al Lackey will become the manager of Atlantic City's Bath & Turf Club. Lackey is the husband and helpmate of Sophie Tucker . . . When the President makes the commencement address at the University of Virginia, where F. D., jr., will receive a law degree, he will stay in his son's 3½-room apartment.

Bullies Lose Screen Favor

No longer does the American girl swoon at the sight of a heaving mass of muscle. No, sir. What she wants today—and what Hollywood is giving her—is the tall, fairly slender type of swashbuckler.

Gary Cooper, Douglas Fairbanks, jr. Fred MacMurray and Errol Flynn are exponents of this type. They are tall, slender and go swashbuckling along through any and all difficulties with all the aplomb of their more muscular forbears.

Cooper is soon to be seen subduing the entire Dominion of Canada in "Northwest Mounted Police."

Fairbanks, jr., is battling lions single-handed in "Safari." MacMurray is a soldier of fortune in "Rangers of Fortune." Flynn has been Robin Hood and soon will be the Sea Hawk.

The younger Fairbanks is probably the typical example of this new trend in films, for he is the opposite of his late father. Doug, sr., was comparatively short and heavy set.

Young Doug is slightly over 6 feet and weighs about 170 pounds. He is well proportioned, but looks slender. His muscles are smooth, not bulgy. Like his father he is quick and light on his feet. Where Doug, sr., used to run about 2 miles daily for exercise, Doug jr. admits he probably couldn't walk that distance comfortably.

In "Safari," he is cast as a white hunter, guide to Madeline Carroll and Tullo Carminatti. He flies airplanes, wrestles lions, gets wounded and otherwise conducts himself in the typical swashbuckling fashion.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 9.

It's all in the point of view. My 82-year-old mother, the most unworldly and sweetest soul I've ever known, flew here from Pittsburgh, and as she tripped off the plane, I asked if she was tired. She said, "Why should I be? I rested the whole way." . . .

HOPPER

We were having tea the other day when in popped Hedy Lamarr, who was perfectly charming, as she always is. And when she left, Mother, who's a little hard of hearing, said, "What a sweet, simple girl! She should be in pictures." But, Mother—that was Hedy Lamarr!" "Well, what of it? Can't she change her name? You did, and you got in pictures."

Madeleine Carroll, with her honey-colored hair and lovely complexion, photographs so beautifully in technicolor that Cecil de Mille advised her never to make another picture in black and white.

Bob Hope, who's broken everybody's personal appearance record on his Eastern tour, did an impromptu act at the Stork Club, New York, that had most of the crowd under the tables. They had come from the opening of "Louisiana Purchase" and everybody raved about Irene Bordoni's comeback.

Phyllis Brooks, right after her broken engagement to Cary Grant, got a six-months' contract at RKO—never did a lick of work there. Option hasn't been taken up, so she'll play in the Eastern straw hat circuit.

Ida Lupino's so thrilled that her mother Connie, who looks like her sister, will be in Al Woods' play, "Goodbye to Love," with Joan Blondil here.

Ever hear of a star willing to chuck it all, when he can write his own ticket with any film company in the business? Well, Bing Crosby is the star, and his close friends insist that Bing will soon confine his activities to radio, records and horses. Bing's kids are growing so fast that he's self-conscious about their reaction to his screen roles. Up to date he hasn't let them see him on the screen.

Bing's mother, who is a darling, fell down and skinned her knee, and badly, but she was still able to crown the winner at Hollywood Park the other day.

Walter Pidgeon, who usually has a pretty good sense of direction, lost it while trying to find his way to the Hollywood Park, which is only 10 miles from his home. Instead, he got there by way of Manhattan Beach, 35 miles distant.

Hollywood, June 9 (INS).—When I tell you that Fred MacMurray will play opposite Madeline Carroll in "Virginia," it sounds like a simple straight-forward piece of news—but it's really part of a casting tangle that is dizzy-making. I'll try to give you the background. Ray Milland was originally slated to do "Virginia." Then Joel McCrea withdrew from the Claudette Colbert starrer, "Arise My Love," and Ray was needed to replace him. So Milland steps into McCrea's spot and MacMurray steps into Milland's.

LOUELLA PARSONS

But that isn't all. The fact that "Virginia" now won't get under way until early in July, because of Miss Carroll's flying trip to Europe and the change in the male lead, puts Franchot Tone out of the cast. Franchot has commitments which make it necessary for him to start "Virginia" immediately or not at all. When they find somebody to fill Tone's shoes I'll let you know—but I won't go into all this again.

Casting the die: George Sanders has signed for one of the top spots in "The Son of Monte Cristo," with Joan Bennett and Louis Hayward. Rowland V. Lee, who directed Robert Donat in "Count of Monte Cristo" 5 years ago, also Megs the sequel . . . Garbo's great friend and adviser, Salka Viertel, who's written most of the G. G. screen plays, may play a mother role in a Twentieth Century-Fox pic . . . in spite of trials and tribulations in the way of illness, casting of "Down Argentine Way" continues. Nastyman J. Carrol Naish has been signed to do some of his expert menacing and Henry Stephenson, a pet of mine—and everyone's—has been set to play Don Amache's father.

Ken Murray took Nancy Kelly to the preview of her picture, "Private Affairs," and Dick Powell among the Hollywood folk who journeyed to Santa Barbara for the "Goodbye to Love" premiere; Jane Withers attended the Postman's Ball with her own postman, Edward Karwiese. He's a grandpop so it was quite a twosome; Margaret Roach stepping out with Victor Mature again—this time at the Florentine Gardens; Paulette Goddard tosses a tea today for Artist Diego Rivera and among those bidden are Dolores Del Rio and Orson Welles, Anita Loos, the King Vidors and the Lewis Milestones; the Johnny Weissmuller heir will be born any day now in San Francisco.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

That fellow staring into blank space is doubtless looking at the American League's Rookie of the Year. We mean there isn't any such young character worthy of the honor. At least not thus far. It will be a blow to the folks who insist on pointing a positive finger as some come-lately to the majors and proclaiming him as The Rookie of The Year.

POVICH

Dominic DiMaggio, who was supposed to be the guy, can't break into the Red Sox outfield despite his $65,000 price tag. One of the reasons is that he is batting a very, very meager .259. The Red Sox are sniffing at that sort of a figure what with none of their regular outfielders hitting less than .333 and collecting the extra base blows that DiMaggio hasn't the power to get.

Early in the spring, a candidate for the Rookie-of-The-Year honors was Jimmy Pofahl, the lad who cost Clark Griffith $35,000. He had led the American Association in hits during most of last year, and there never was any complaint about his fielding. But where is Pofahl now? We know. He's on the bench, trying to disown a .230 batting average that is clinging to him annoyingly. Playing shortstop for Washington is Cecil Travis, who happens to be hittng .346.

If the fact that he isn't exactly a 1940 importation can be overlooked, Ray Mack, of the Cleveland Indians, probably qualifies better than anybody else for Rookie-of-the-Year accolades. Overlook the fact that Mack came up with the Indians midway in 1939, and you can build up quite a case for him as the outstanding young player of this season. At least to this point.

Unless Mack fizzles badly from here in, he will present a startling sort of case. There never was any doubt about his ability to play base. He demonstrated that not only to the complete satisfaction but the giddy delight of the Indians last season. He was the slickest Cleveland second baseman since Bill Wambsganss, and that was 20 years ago. He can go get a ball and get it away from him as nicely as either Bobby Doerr or Joe Gordon, who have been monopolizing the best-second-baseman debates.

The only item that worried Cleveland in its estimates of Mack was his hitting. At Buffalo, he barely hit .260, and this season they put him eighth in the batting order, which was the tip-off on their thoughts. Well, the leading hitter on the Cleveland club at this moment is young Mr. Mack, who is batting a bright .327 and is the only rookie in the league who is batting better than .300.

Mack is no powder-puff hitter. He moves the ball a long way. He has hit 4 home runs, 3 triples and 13 doubles. He came out of Case School of Applied Science, in Ohio, with a degree, and not one of those mere physical-ed parchments. He got his in engineering. He's a 210-pounder, but he's just about the fastest guy on the Cleveland Club when it comes to moving his big tootsies. He was such a good fullback at Case, that the Chicago Bears signed him even though they already had a guy named Bronko Nagurski on the club. Mack chucked pro football.

Somehow, the Cleveland Club seems to have obtained a sort of monopoly on the standout newcomers to the American League. They have come up with quite a guy, too, in Al Smith, a lefthanded pitcher who seems to have won five games with only one defeat this season. Smith is a rookie, however, only in the sense that he came into the league this year. He's 32 years old, and kicked around in the National League for a half dozen years with the Giants and the Phillies. The Indians grabbed him when he won 16 games and lost only two with Buffalo last year.

Lou Boudreau came up to the Indians in company with Mack last season, and if you want to consider him as a newcomer, it's not difficult to build up a case for Boudreau, also. He's the best young shortstop to break into the majors since Joe Cronin. Defensively, he is the best shortstop in the league. In fact, the only shortstop who is outhitting him is Luke Appling. Boudreau at this writing can show a very respectable .291 figure for his batting efforts, generously sprinkled with extra-base contributions.

Mack, Smith and Boudreau—all of them belonging to the Indians—they are the only sensations among the American League's young characters. Marvin Breuer, of the Yanks, has pitched cleverly enough to net himself five wins and only two defeats this season, and Walter Masterson has won three and lost only one for the Nats, but they have not been any balls of fire yet. It doesn't appear to be in 1940 to produce any striking resemblance to Ted Williams and Charley Keller, of the 1939 rookie output.

Yanks Defeat Indians, 4-3; Homers Aid

DiMaggio, Selkirk, Dalgren Connect For Round-Trippers

By the Associated Press

New York, June 9.—Cleveland's Al Smith, who had twice before beaten the Yanks in chalking up five straight pitching victories this season, bowed to the long-range power of the world champions today.

The Yankees, sparked by three homers, stopped the Indians, 4-3, and prevented the visitors from taking first place in the American League from the idle Boston Red Sox, whose game with the Detroit Tigers was rained out.

Four-base smacks by Babe Dahlgren, Joe DiMaggio and George Selkirk were the three most vicious blows struck in the sixth that Smith allowed the Yanks and they accounted for all the champions' scores.

Boudreau Connects

Dahlgren put the yanks into a lead in the fifth inning with his second four-baser of the season. That lead was short lived however as Lou Boudreau, the Indians' sterling shortstop, clouted a homer with Pitcher Smith on base.

But DiMaggio put the champs back in front with a four-ply blow in the sixth that sent Charley Keller scampering home ahead of him and George Selkirk found the range in the same inning for his eighth circuit blow of the season.

Timely Double Plays

Charley (the Red) Ruffing went the distance, scattering nine Indian hits to win his fourth game of the season, against five setbacks.

The final Cleveland run came when Odell Hale emerged as a successful pinch hitter and scored soon on Roy Mack's single.

Griffs Score 3 Runs in Ninth Inning

Lyons Chased After Game Seemed Won; Lewis Hits Homer; Joe Haynes Loser

By Shirley Povich.

Post Staff Writer

The Nats played with the emotions of 8,000 Griffith Stadium fans for ten innings yesterday and then let them down rudely. They couldn't stir up anything to match a White Sox run in the eleventh and lost the ball game, 4 to 3.

Back in the ninth they wrenched the customers out of a doleful mood by suddenly breaking free from the yoke imposed by Ted Lyons and wiping out a 3-0 lead of the White Sox. Held to three hits at that point, they swatted Lyons out of the box and mauled his successor, Johnny Rigney, for five hits that produced the necessary three runs.

But in the eleventh they played the folks in the stands false again. And the White Sox scored the winning run to the accompaniment of boos for Gerald Walker, the erstwhile Peepul's Choice, who had struck out ingloriously in the ninth and made an incredible muff of a fly ball in the eleventh.

Haynes No Relief

After Willis Hudlin had turned the White Sox back scoreless in the tenth with the aid of a timely double play, Joe Haynes got the pitching job in the last inning and, to be brutally blunt about it, he made a mess of it.

He got Taft Wright out, but Luke Appling banged him for a single to center and then Larry Rosenthal whipped a single to right that moved Appling to third. Eric McNair drove in the winning run. He did it with a long fly to leftfield. Walker, in his eagerness to get into throwing position, sort of neglected to catch the ball and was charged with an error as Appling crossed the plate. Walker's muff didn't make any difference. The run would have scored on a perfect catch.

Washington didn't have any answer to that run. Johnny Welaj, a hero of the ninth-inning uprising, meekly flied out to center. Walker, no hero in the ninth, hoisted a routine fly to left. Bonura, who had produced the tying run in the ninth, waved futilely at a third strike this time.

Nats Lash Out

For young Walter Masterson the White Sox victory was a bitter dose. He wasn't charged with the defeat, but he pitched cleverly enough to win. He allowed seven hits before he was extracted for a pinch hitter in the eighth, but all three of the Chicago runs off him were tainted affairs.

The Nats were an inspiring outfit in that ninth when they finally solved Lyons' knuckler. For eight innings they had been helpless against him. Masterson's single in the third, Early's single in the sixth, and Bonura's futile double against the wall in left in the seventh were

Hudson on Mound Today as Browns Invade Stadium

Sidney Hudson, beaten in 11 innings by the Cleveland Indians in his last start, returns to the mound today as the St. Louis Browns move into Griffith Stadium for a three-game series.

Hudson, now established as a regular starter for the Nats, has seemingly conquered an inclination toward wildness.

The Browns, who are in a virtual tie with the Nats for sixth place, are expected to pitch George Coffman in the series opener.

With his arm around Gene Sarazen and the victory cup in his hand, Lawson Little faced the cheering crowd at Canterbury yesterday and the big-money winning year for a pro golfer. He had just shot a 70 to beat Sarazen's 73 in taking the Open

Veteran Pro Cards One Over Par 73; 7,500 Spectators Witness Play-Off

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

A Staff Correspondent

Canterbury Golf Club, Cleveland, Ohio, June 9.—Lawson Little, who turned pro four years ago but was still called just a good amateur golfer, showed them he has what it takes by winning the forty-fourth National Open championship here today as Gene Sarazen's bid for a third title fell three strokes short in the 18-hole playoff. Little was 2 under par with a 70 and Sarazan 1 over with 73.

A pro-Sarazen gallery of some 7,500, that braved the early starting time of 9:30 and the $2.85 admission, watched the 38-year-old 1922-23 champion come within a 5-foot putt of overtaking a four-stroke deficit, only to lose it right back as Little finished like a true champion.

Little takes his place with Bobby Jones as the only man ever to hold the British and National Amateur titles, plus the Open. He is the sixth to hold both the Amateur and Open titles, joining Jones, Francis Ouimet, Chick Evans, Jerry Travers and Johnny Goodman.

Two of the biggest names in golf promised a great playoff and they did not disappoint. Only seven holes were halved as Little came through with four birdies and was over twice while Sarazan missed par four times but added an eagle and two bridies during the thrilling-hole round.

Attired in his conventional knickers and bow tie, Sarazen was cool as an ice cube, outwardly at least, and almost hurried his shots while his more deliberate opponent, dressed in white with a shirt open at the collar, smoked incessantly, nervously dried his hands on a towel before each shot and took three or four times as long to look over the shot before he hit the ball.

The late arrivals, who expected to catch the match on the course, missing the usual dull opening holes in playoffs, missed the punch today. For at the end of five holes Sarazen found himself four strokes back. He cut it to one at the eleventh, lost it back and cut it to one again at the fourteenth, holing chip shots for birdies each time, before Little's birdie spurt late on the back nine earned the title.

Little, taller, heavier and eight years younger, was expected to outhit Sarazen by some 40 to 60 yards, but rarely was the difference more than a few club lengths. Both seemed to be playing for position, rather than take a chance with long wild tee shots that would lead to trouble.

Little gave him the one-two count on the first two holes. Sarazan started with a poor chip shot on the first hole and missed a putt for a par, while on the second the new champion dropped a 16-foot birdie putt. They halved three and four in regulation style, but the fifth was the turning point of the match. Little drove into a trap bordering the fairway while Gene was down the middle and it looked as though anything could happen. But in less time than it takes to tell it, Little banged a second on the green and dropped a 12-foot birdie putt while Sarazen approached short, chipped past the pin and missed the putt for a big five and found himself four strokes back.

Gene Gets Eagle

The sixth was a typical Sarazen comeback. He spanked two fine wood shots on the green on the fairly easy par five and holed a 45-footer for an eagle while Little was fortunate in bagging a par after playing the hole via the trees and rough route. That cut the margin to two shots again but in the up-and-down theme of the playoff Little got one back on the par three seventh when Sarazen missed the green and took four.

Eight, nine and ten were halved. Sarazen missing a birdie chance on the 9th when his short approach had such backspin it jumped back 18 feet and left him a 30-foot putt. The par three eleventh brought a great cheer when Little missed a 50-foot putt by a fraction of an inch

Annapolis Man Wins Boat Race At Galesville

John Craner Takes 20-Foot Class in West River Series

Before a fair breeze, a score of sailboats turned out to make good time yesterday in the first race in the twelfth annual series of the West River Sailing Club at Galesville, Md. The race was sailed over a 3-mile windward-leeward course.

In the 20-foot round bottom class, which brought out nine boats, Stormy Weather, skippered by John Chaner, of Annapolis, led with actual time of 1.28:0. Two minutes behind him was Chesapeake, Ernest Hartge, of Galesville. Wings, captained by Carroll Smith, of Galesville was third in 1:32.

Sea Witch II, with C. Craemer, of Annapolis, at the tiller, took the 20-foot chine bottom class event in 1:35.30. Ealohis, Carlton Skinner, of Washington, was second in 1:38.30, and Lightning did not finish.

The Albatross class race went to the Galesville Hawk, Emile Hartge, in 3:34, followed in 1:36 by Whistler, John Nairn, of Washington. Third was Raven, Arthur Fife, of Washington, in 1:39.

Giants Hand Cards Another Twin Licking

New York Wins, 11-9, In 11 Innings, and 7-4; Error Loses Opener

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, June 9.—The New York Giants picked up today right where they left off yesterday and swept another double-header with the hapless St. Louis Cardinals. The scores were 11 to 9 and 7 to 4.

After losing out in an 11-inning opener, the Cardinals fought back in the nightcap and at the end of seven innings had a 4-to-3 lead.

Then things happened fast. Mel Ott, Billy Jurges and Mickey Witek rapped Bill McGee for singles. An error by Terry Moore helped the New York cause along. Harry Danning batted for Jimmy Lynn and greeted Jack Russell with a single. Joe Moore was passed intentionally, but Frank Demaree pounded out a mighty double. The result: five runs and the ball game.

The Giants' "meal ticket," Carl Hubbell, who will be 37 years old June 22, tried for his sixth straight victory in the opener, but was removed after yielding 10 hits in six innings. Home runs by Ott and Demaree piled up a lead for the Giants, but Johnny Mize tied the score by clouting his sixteenth homer with two aboard in the ninth.

In the eleventh, with two out and Babe Young on first, Stuart Martin threw wild on Danning's grounder and Young scored all the way from

Little Gets Cup, Medal, but Wife Gets $1,000 Check

By the Associated Press

Canterbury Golf Club, Cleveland, June 9.—That $1,000 prize for winning the forty-fourth National Open golf championship didn't go to Lawson Little after all.

The 30-year-old apprentice professional from Bretton Woods, N. H., fired a two under par 70 today over Canterbury's soggy layout, to beat Gene Sarazen, squire of Brookfield Center, Conn., by three strokes in the playoff.

For the victory he was supposed to get the National Open title, a diamond-studded medal, a huge silver cup and $1,000 in cash. He received everything but the "dough."

Harold W. Pierce, of Boston, president of the United States Golf Association, in presenting the assortment of awards to the new champ, said:

"Now here's a $1,000 check for Mr. Little. But I imagine the finances of the Little family are handled just as they are in every other home, so I'm presenting the cash to Mrs. Little."

He handed the check for a "grand" to Little's attractive blonde wife, the former Miss Dorothy Hurd, of Chicago, who folded it with a smile and tucked it away in her huge purse.

Byron Nelson, Demaret Win In Exhibition

Defeat Ben Hogan, Bill Heinlein at Highland Club

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, June 9.—Byron Nelson, of Toledo, Ohio, dethroned yesterday as National Open golf champion, and Jimmy Demaret, of Houston, Tex., one of the winter circuit stars, defeated Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y., golf's leading money winner for 1940, and Bill Heinlein, of Noblesville, Ind., 1 up in an exhibition match at the Highland Golf and Country Club here today.

Heinlein, who has won every major Indiana amateur and professional title, and Demaret shared individual honors by matching the par 70 for the course. Nelson had a 71, while Hogan shot a 72.

Greg Rice Wins Two-Mile Race

Mineol, N. Y., June 9 (AP).—Greg Rice, of the South Bend A. A., former Notre Dame runner, easily won the invitation 3-mile run at the Chaminade High School relay meet today. Rice was timed in 9:15 as he finished a good 100 yards ahead of Joe McCluskey, New York A. C. veteran.

Dodgers Take First, Reds Win Second

Carleton 9-1 Victor; Junior Thompson Hurls 6-2 Second Game

By International News Service

Cincinnati, O., June 9.—Cincinnati held its grip on first place in the National League today by splitting a twin-bill with Brooklyn, the Dodgers capturing the opener, 9 to 1, but dropping the second game, 6 to 2.

After being routed 23 to 2 yesterday by the Reds, Brooklyn, behind the steady pitching of Tex Carleton, came back to lace Cincinnati in the opener. The Dodgers pounded four pitchers for 15 hits, while Carleton limited the Reds to five.

The Dodgers started out well in the twilight contest, scoring two runs in the first. After that, Pitcher Junior Thompson settled down to handcuff Brooklyn the rest of the route to get credit for the win.

Chicago Colects 27 Hits; French Victor In First Game

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 9.—The Chicago Cubs pounded seven Boston pitchers for 27 hits today and a double victory, 7 to 1 and 15 to 8, before 17,714 spectators, running their winning streak to seven games.

Larry French tossed a six-hitter in the first game for his seventh victory of the season, coasting to the decision after the Cubs hopped on Bill Posedel for five runs on as many hits in the third inning.

The Cubs took advantage of George Barnicle's wildness in the nightcap to score six runs in the second inning, but the Bees rallied to take an 8-to-6 lead in the fourth, when 41-year-old Charley Root was sent to the showers.

Post's All-Schoolboy Nine One of the Strongest in Years

Team Strong On Defense And at Plate

Eight District Boys Are Selected on '40 Squad; Two County Players Are Named

By Bill Burnett

With the whole District, nearby Virginia and Maryland to choose from, The Washington Post's 1940 All-District Schoolboy baseball team presents more plate strength, defensive ability and general all-round versatility than a local all-star aggregation has boasted in some years.

An informal poll of coaches, as well as a season of association with metropolitan Washington players, forces the selection of eight players from the recently concluded public high school series, one from Montgomery Blair, in Silver Spring, and one from Washington-Lee, in Arlington. And, by virtue of its undefeated status in local schoolboy ranks, Central ranks well a head of all other schools with four berths. Eastern, interhigh runner-up for the second year, places two, and Western and Roosevelt each place one.

Fisher Is Tops

It was no accident that Central's "Gas House Gang" won its second straight title last week. It's Sunday's pitcher, Billy Fisher, was undoubtedly the best the District claimed. He won six of the Vikings' seven interhigh outings, saved the other when Charley Kligman faltered, and struck out a total of 74 opposing batsmen.

Warren Erhardt, All-District choice from Eastern, wasn't quite the pitcher Fisher was but he also furnished the Tide a batting punch it sadly lacked at times. On the mound he won four and lost two, including a heart-breaking 4-3 beating in the title game. At the plate he ground out a record of .588, better than 95 per cent of the lads who were in there for their slugging alone.

One brilliant young hurler, Eddie Vermillion, of Roosevelt, was pushed out of an All-District berth by his own team. Held back by an erratic infield and unassisted by most of his mates at bat, 200-pound Eddie fought to the last pitch in every game. He lost four and won only one, but got in his licks at bat with a .333 average that led his team. Another bright star who just missed a place was Johnny Murnane, of Alexandria's G. W. High, who hurled a no-hit seven-inning game at Gonzaga and several 2 and 3-hit efforts.

Shepherd Honored

Backstop of the mythical Post team may be a surprise to followers of Zello Lagos and Harry Martin, of Central; Hymie Perlo, of Roosevelt, and Ralph Calisto, of Wilson. But big, lazy Raymond (Shanty) Shepherd, of Washington-Lee, is conceded the spot. He was a better and longer hitter than any of the aforementioned. He wasn't a better catcher than Martin or Perlo, but Martin flunked out late in the season and Perlo's eyes ruined his batting average. Calisto and Lagos had the fire Shepherd lacked, but the chubby W.-L. catcher made up for that with the willow.

Little competition occurred in the fight for infield positions. Western's Bob Leach, with a mark of .308, got first base over Eastern's Jack Hoffman, the most improved player in the series. There wasn't another second baseman within hailing distance of Pat Fenlon, who accepted 28 chances without an error and batted a neat .400. Fenlon, as a matter of fact, is probably the best major league prospect on the team.

Steiner at Short

At shortstop is Benny Steiner. His unerring eye at bat—he didn't strike out once all year and boasted the interhigh batting championship with .509 in the regular series—was his big talking point. He also accepted more fielding chances, boasted a better arm than any youngster in this vicinity.

Third base went to Central's Sam Di Blasi without a struggle. He was easily tops over a highly uncertain and innocuous set of "hot corner" caretakers. Along with that, his .429 average at bat put him far out in front.

Of the outfielders, Johnny Norris, of Blair, was outstanding. By way of variety he played first base, shortstop and pitched in addition to gardening for the suburbanites, in every position turning in a spectacular game. He was the slugging star for Blair, too, hitting well over .450 for the season. Lester Micklein was Roosevelt's main claim to fame, other than Vermillion. He fielded almost flawlessly and batted .321 while the Riders were barely breaking even in games won and lost. A newcomer to scholastic ranks, Eastern's "Lefty" Gatton ground out 14 hits in 26 official times at bat, to be as much responsible for Eastern's success as Erhardt. Two triples and a home run were mixed in his .538 average.

Adair-Garnett Upset in City TennisTourney

Youthful Tom Wadden And Cowan Surprise; Most Favorites Win

Form prevailed in the City of Washington Tennis Championships at Edgemoor Club yesterday for the second straight day, the lone upset of any consequence occurring in the doubles.

Only surprise of another session of generally one-sided matches was the defeat of Buddy Adair and Yelverton Garnett by the youthful combination of Maurice Cowan and Tom Wadden in first-round doubles. The scores were 7—5, 6—3. Adair and Garnett, though not seeded, were regarded as strong.

Barney Welsh, top-seeded in the singles, was given unexpected opposition by Strand Johnsen, father of Davie, the defending champion, but triumphed, 6—4, 6—1. Second-seeded Hugh Lynch defeated Eddie Becker, 6—0, 7—5, while Davie Johnsen, seeded third, polished off veteran Tom Mangan, 6—4, 6—1.

Third-round singles matches today include three which loom as real battles. At 4 o'clock Lynch meets Austin Rice and Johnsen plays Dick Murphy, former Longwood Bowl champion, and at 5:15 Buddy Adair and Bill Breese, a pair of sluggers, will oppose.

Lynch and Johnsen also will be involved in the doubles feature of the day as they try to beat the upstart combination of Cowan and Wadden starting at 3 o'clock. Another topnotch match should develop between Welsh and Dooly Mitchell and Mangan and Doyle Royal, although the latter team hardly has a chance to win.

Cameo Beats Frederick, 6-1

No Runs Are Earned; Deavers Hurling Star

Frederick, Md., June 9.—In a game in which there wasn't a single earned run, Cameo Athletic Club of Washington defeated the Frederick Hustlers here this afternoon before a large crowd, 6-1. Frank Deavers, Cameo righthander, completely stymied the Hustlers and didn't allow a hit until the seventh inning. Six errors ruined Fraley's effectiveness. The Hustlers have lost two games this season, both to Cameo.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald

Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Walter Masterson and Zeke Bonura were the standout performers for the Nats yesterday, and improve their ratings in the Man of the Month contest. We are distributing points as follows on the basis of yesterday's game:

To Masterson, ten points, because he kept the Nats in the ball game with eight innings of clever pitching, and because all three of the runs he allowed were tainted by misplays.

To Zeke Bonura, eight points, because he drove home the tying run from second with his single in the ninth and because he also doubled in the seventh.

To Buddy Lewis, four points, because his ninth-inning homer with a man on base restored the Nats to the ball game.

To George Case, three points, because he beat out a bunt to start the ninth-inning rally.

To Johnny Welaj, three points, because he doubled in the ninth to put the tying run on base. The totals:

Dutch Leonard	34	Jimmy Pofahl	12
Walter Masterson	30	George Case	12
Johnny Welaj	21	Gerald Walker	10
Zeke Bonura	21	Jake Early	9
Jimmy Bloodworth	19	Joe Haynes	8

Jones, Ed Dudley Win Exhibition Play for Charity

Columbus, Ohio, June 9 (AP).—Bobby Jones, of Atlanta, returned today to the Scioto Country Club course, on which he won the 1926 National Open golf championship. He teamed with Ed Dudley, of Philadelphia in defeating Jimmy Thomson, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., and Horton Smith, of Oak Park, Ill., 2 and 1, in an 18-hole exhibition match for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Thomson was the individual star, breaking the course record with a five under par, 67. Jones and Dudley each scored 71 and Smith had a par 72.

Pawnees Down Chicago Aztecs

The Washington Pawnees stepped out with some of their best skating of the series last night as they turned back the Chicago Aztecs in their Roller Derby game before 1,700 persons at Riverside Stadium, 16 to 10.

This victory squared the current series at ten games all and both teams will be fighting for the edge when they continue their rivalry at Riverside tonight at 8:15 o'clock. Equally as interesting as the game itself will be the championship match race final involving Bernice Abar, of Washington, and Alicia Gadias, of Chicago.

Outfielder Breaks Leg As Tru-Blu Ten Wins

Charley Jones, outfielder for Tru-Blu softball team, broke his ankle in two places and was removed to Takoma Sanitarium last night during Tru-Blu's 4-0 shutout of G. P. O. in the Sport Center League. The victory was credited to Billy Sullivan, who hurled 2-hit ball.

Softball Meeting

A meeting of the Commercial Twilight Softball League will be held tonight at the Sport Center at 8 p. m. Teams requested to be represented are Ida's, Tru-Blu, D. C. Silents, Kavakos, Municipal Fish Market, Coopers, Ryans, Pepco, Garvins and Dixie Tavern.

'Skeeters' Win Two-Day Match

Two-Target Margin; Watson Fires a 50;

The annual battle between Washington's trap and skeet shooters came to an active end yesterday, but the results of two days of firing should furnish conversation matter for the remainder of the year.

"Skeeters," at least during 1940, may now look down their noses at their trap-shooting rivals. After suffering a 48-target loss to the trapmen of Washington Gun Club Saturday on the latter's home range, skeet representatives of National Capital Club came back yesterday on their range to earn a 2-target advantage for the series.

Yesterday's score was 481 to 431, a 50-point victory for the hosts. Rufus Watson paced the "skeeters" with a perfect 50 score, and Paul Stone and J. Chauncey turned in 49x50 each. The best Washington Gun Club firers could ring up were 48's by J. R. Hall and M. Rose.

Reese Recovered, To Rejoin Dodgers

Chicago, June 9 (AP).—Harold (Peewee) Reese, rookie shortstop, who was struck on the head by a pitched ball June 1, said tonight he planned to leave the Illinois Masonic Hospital tomorrow and rejoin the Brooklyn Dodgers in Pittsburgh.

Reese, attending the Chicago-Boston double-header today, barely escaped injury again as he sat in a box seat along the third-base line.

Pirates, Phils Split Header; Mulcahy Victor

Pittsburgh Takes Nightcap, 11-5, After Losing First, 6-1

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, June 9.—Pittsburgh and Philadelphia divided a double-header today, the Phillies copping the opener, 6 to 1, and the Pirates taking an abbreviated nightcap, 11 to 5.

Mack Mulcahy earned the victory in the opener when he allowed only seven shattered safeties to halt the Pirates' four-game winning streak. Meanwhile, the Phillies bunched ten hits for their six runs, with Bob Klinger, the first of three Pittsburgh pitchers, the victim.

The second game was halted at the end of eight innings because of a 7 p. m. (daylight saving time) Sunday curfew. By that time the Pirates had jumped on Losing Pitcher Ike Pearson and the relief, Cy Blanton, for 11 runs and the ball game. Joe Bowman, although replaced by Mace Brown in the fifth, was the victor.

U. S. Randle Hunters Win Championship and Reserve

Hi-Ho, Black Caddy Tie for Jumpers' Title; Former Wins As Hughes Concedes

By Anne Hagner

Two good-looking hunters from U. S. Randle's stable ran rampant at the Suitland Horse Show yesterday and emerged with championship and reserve honors for their efforts.

The mounts, Gee Ray Bee and Randle's Shadow, performed consistently all afternoon with Owner Randle and Johnny Keeler alternating in the saddle. For Gee Ray Bee it was his first major show award.

No one was surprised at the hunter titles, but the situation was less cut-and-dried in the open jumping ranks. Championships were awarded, as usual, on the basis of points won, and Fred Hughes' Black Caddy tied with Lisbeth Stieg's Hi-Ho when each horse earned 11 points.

Hughes Steps Aside

Instead of jumping off with Miss Stieg's mare, however, Hughes preferred to step aside and let Hi-Ho be named jumper champion, although Caddy's performances throughout the day made him easily the most outstanding horse on the grounds. His victories came in the handy jumpers and the skyscraper events, with Hi-Ho placing second on both occasions.

Miss Stieg was able to put the little chestnut on top in only one class, open jumpers, in addition to the minor ribbons.

Only accident of the day came when Mrs. Donald Bradley fell from her husband's Best Time on the outside course and received a bad shaking up and a spine contusion.

Aside from the Randle victories, Marrian Curran's St. Patrick and Tahra were most frequently in the ribbons.

Black Caddy's triumph in the skyscraper was the most exciting of the late afternoon's events as the 13-year-old stallion jumped off with Hi-Ho at 5 feet 6 inches, and went clean to take the blue. Hi-Ho was second over Hammond Welsh's High Boy and Randle's Cateer, with Johnny Keeler aboard.

Caddy Works Hard

Although the skyscraper was by far the most interesting, Caddy worked much harder for a third-place ribbon in the triple bar, when he jumped off five times. Owner Hughes rode him in his initial trip around the course, but put Miss Stieg up in later jumpoffs to reduce the weight-carrying handicap. Frank Lillard's Brandy finally won the event, with Randle's Cateer second over Caddy and Flying Charger, also owned by Lillard.

GIANT-SCHNAUZER

Used in Wurttemberg and Bavaria as a cattle driver this fellow has since been drafted into use as a guard dog and more recently has become very popular for police work. He is very intelligent and affectionate and afraid of nothing that wears hair. In color he is grizzle or salt and pepper mixtures and he stands from 21 to 26 inches high at the shoulder

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Rating Secretary Freddie Burton, who had the flu, was sufficiently improved last Saturday to come to the track for a brief period and he helped line-up today's program, the best Monday offering of the meeting to date. The fifth and sixth races are first-flight fields hereabouts. In the former, Roman Boy meets Caidon, Butterman and others. In the latter, Schley Goree tests his stuff against National, Swift Air, Heel Dust and others. Certainly looks odd to see Andy K. racing on the inside in a driving finish, as in the Belmont. Consistent and Erada are the only horses on the grounds to win four races. The latter has bad "dogs," but they certainly carry him places. The jockeys are claiming fouls these days as evidence by the traffic up the stops to the stewards last Saturday. The officials haven't set down enough riders to form a baseball team, as was the case here one year, but Willie Hartney and Jack Murray have been given the meeting and they could get together and play some table tennis. Even the little birds in the trees thought Timetta was going to be disqualified in that week-end race. I knew I should have left off those smoked glasses. District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen has been vacationing hereabouts, his auto tags, "D. C. No. 1," making him a standout track visitor. One of the lovely Martinsburg twins will be a bride soon. The touts had a meeting the other night and drew straws for first crack at Art Brown, big wind from WOL, and scheduled to blow in soon. In referring to a horse working a half in :49 1-5, the horsemen say that he worked in 49 and some change. Jockey Skeets Holland has been suspended at Delaware Park. I'll wager it wasn't for not trying. The boys and girls bet a million two hundred grand at Belmont Saturday, which is buying a ticket or two. Nora plays a mean harmonica and she's still trying to get Chilly Ebbie home. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—The Johnston Entry of Delhi Dan and Clay Hill appears best suited of the juveniles listed for this abbreviated sprint. Either could take down the major money. Mayfera has won two in a row and is dangerous. He Rolls' last was a fast winning effort.

Second race—Brainchild has been the victim of poor racing luck hereabout. The mare has a nice effort behind Consistent early in the meeting as a recommendation in this field. Golden Key can better that last and is a threat. Wam bore out turning for home last out and will improve.

Third race—Swift Light has been chasing a good brand of sprinters in recent races. Meets those of her age today and with good handling could take it all. Deblin, on best form, belongs right there with these. Grand Waltz for the minor award.

Four race—Balkanese has run four good races at this meeting and is fit as hands make horses. I'm going to string along. Cautious Bo was beaten a nose in fast time and is improving. Autumn Echo and Amerlee are hard to guess.

Fifth race—Notoriety has worked brilliantly, gets a nice shift in weights from the stars of this field and I'm going to string along provided the track is fast. Roman Boy comes back to the short sprint route and is a threat despite high weight. Time Her was never better.

Sixth race—The best race Bullet B. has run at Charles Town was over a fast track at about this route. Could surprise this gang. Schley Goree looms as the favorite and definitely is the one to beat. Swift Air would move up on and off track.

Seventh race—Clymene has had some rest and draws an inside post position. She hasn't been out of the money in four starts and could bring the Bennings Stable a winner. Trostar is the one to beat. Gold D'Or is at tops and is dangerous.

Eighth race—I'm going back in the record book to try to make Machilla win in this. The distance suits and I'm tossing out those last two efforts. The Swagman is fit and ready and will be close. Aufoin is long overdue.

Substitute races—If No. 1 is used, I'll take Circus Lights, Rare Gem and Never Home. If No. 2 is used, I'll take Counter Pass, Bright Light and Bright Spirits.

Best bet—Balkanese.

Little Beats Sarazen for Open Crown

Two-Under-Par 70 Nets Victory in 18-Hole Play-Off

and then Sarazen holed one from the fringe of the green for a great birdie deuce.

Gene picked up another stroke on 12 and was only one back as Little was trapped in two. Again he lost it right back when he hooked his second shot in the woods on the par five thirteenth. He moved a twig over the ball that would have cost him a stroke penalty if the ball had moved, sacrificed out in the fairway and wound up with a bad six after hitting a chip shot in the heel of the club and knocking it all the way over the green.

Gene Sarazen was apparently finished on the fourteenth, when he hit a poor second shot to the right of the green but again the master of the short game chipped in the hole for a birdie and Little escaped with a par after putting six feet past the cup.

One stroke back with four holes to play, Little applied the pressure finish. A great second shot on the fifteenth and an easy birdie putt boosted his margin to two shots, and a 12-footer for a birdie on the sixteenth made it three strokes and two holes to play. They were both all over seventeenth and halved it in birdie 4s. Sarazen missing for the shortest putt and on the final hole, Little was just short in 3 and chipped close for an easy par. Sarazen took more time on his final putt than any other shot of the day, although he was hopelessly beaten. He barely missed a birdie and then was almost knocked off his feet as two spectators ran in for Little's ball and tore a gaping hole in the green as they slid across.

Strange to say, when Little tapped in his winning putt, not over 50 people cheered. The applause could not compare with the cheers that greeted Sarazen when he left the green a beaten man. There was no doubt as to who the crowd favored today.

Little's victory was worth $1,000, while Sarazen received $600 for runner-up, but the real value of the Open is in indorsements, exhibitions, etc., that will follow for the new champion.

Little, who won the National Amateur here in 1938 to complete his little slam, said at the presentation: "I had a hunch Cleveland was the best town in the world, but now I know it." Sarazen took the big mug and caressing it fondly said, "Sweetheart, I've had two dates with you and an appointment today, but you fell for a younger man."

Little, who quit the simon-pures after having reached the peak of amateur triumphs, had little success as a pro until today. The only medal play events he won in four years were the Canadian Open three years ago and the Los Angeles Open on the last winter circuit.

Sarazen's round today was his eighty-fifth in National Open competition. He won twice, was runner-up in 1924 and has been third four times. Today's play-off was the fifteenth in 44 years.

Griffs Hop on Lyons For All Runs in 9th As Lewis Homers

Then George Case set the stage for the uprising by beating out a bunt down the third-base line. Here Buddy Lewis took up the cudgel. He took a two-run chunk out of the White Sox lead with a well-smacked homer over the rightfield wall, the second time that stunt has been accomplished at Griffith Stadium this season.

Walker Fans

The rally was on in full cry when Johnny Welaj poked a long double into center with none as yet out, but Walker was no comfort to the 3,000. Rigney succeeded Lyons on the mound, and Walker disdained a bunt, either with orders or against orders, and then struck out miserably on a low ball that skimmed the plate. But Zeke Bonura saved a great many faces by slamming a single to left that tied the score. Travis fouled out, Bloodworth singled to left and Early grounded out to send the game into extra innings.

There was some apprehension in the tenth when Hudlin pitched singles to Kennedy and Kubel that placed runners on first and third with only one out, but the Nats played back for a double play and got one when Kreevich grounded to Travis.

Rigney was the winning pitcher. He won the game by holding the Nats hitless in the tenth and eleventh.

Lewis' Error Costly

Against the three-hit ball Lyons was pitching in the first eight innings, Rookie Masterson was doing tolerably well himself. He gave up two runs to the White Sox in the fifth, but they were unearned. They spawned from a muff by Buddy Lewis on Tresh's bunt. A sacrifice and singles by Kennedy and Kreevich moved the two runs home.

The White Sox came up with their third run in the seventh after Tresh tripled into the rightfield corner with one out. Lyons fetched the run home on a high pop which Travis couldn't reach after soaring Walker away from the catch.

Overambitious base running by Rosenthal may have cost the White Sox a run in the sixth. He tripled into the right center corner, but was out at home when he tried to stretch the blow, on a relay that involved Case, Bloodworth, Bonura and Early.

Judge Rutledge Raps Flag-Salute Rule in Schools

By the Associated Press

Boulder, Colo., June 9.—A Pennsylvania law which permits school districts to require children to salute the American Flag was criticized today by Judge Wiley B. Rutledge, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

"In the recent awakening to the reality of our precarious position as possibly the last refuge, if not the last museum of democratic society, war hysteria brings not only the hunt for the fifth column, as it should, but confusion of the traitor and the unconventional democrat," the jurist declared.

Addressing a University of Colorado audience at the dedication of a group of new buildings, he said:

"We forget that it is the regimentation of children in the Fascist and Communist salutes that the very freedom for which Jehovah's Witnesses strive has been destroyed."

The United States Supreme Court last week held the law requiring school children to salute the Flag was not in violation of the Federal Constitution.

Survey Predicts War-Bred Famine

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, June 9.—A famine in the "near future" in the countries Germany has occupied, including northern France, was predicted today in a survey of European food conditions prepared by the Commission for Polish Relief, Inc. The survey said that starvation has "undoubtedly existed" for the past several months among "wide masses" of the Poles.

The survey, made public by Col. William J. Donovan, president of the Paderewski Fund for Polish Relief, was compiled from a "semiofficial report from Nazi Germany" and from the study of preinvasion statistics.

The candidate, who opposes government-indorsed Manuel Avila Camacho, urged closer relations with the United States and a better understanding of their common problems.

Bishop Hughes Ordains Group At Baltimore

Methodist Leader Preaches Last Sermon; Will Retire June 25

By the Associated Press

Westminster, Md., June 9.—Approximately 1,500 persons attended the ordination service of the Baltimore annual Methodist Conference today to hear the last conference sermon to be delivered by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, resident bishop of the conference, who will retire June 20.

Bishop Hughes was in charge of the ordination, assisted by the six conference district superintendents.

Speaking on the "Doctrine of Humanity," Bishop Hughes said it was not intended to be abused and that "God never at any time degraded humanity."

"The longer I live, the more I am impressed with the heartlessness of the city, where nobody knows you and you know nobody. When you live in a big city and meet tens of thousands of people that you do not know—if you are not careful you will get awfully careless about humanity.

"If you believe that God created man in his own image you can never hold yourself cheaply and you can never hold humanity cheaply."

The bishop first ordained a group of deacons who were presented by the Rev. W. F. Wright, of Baltimore, conference secretary. The Revs. Richard William Buckingham, Pearson; Leopold Mozart Hayes, Mount Airy; Elmer Leroy Gimmel, Arbutus; Raymond H. Firth, Seat Pleasant; Harold Ashton Milstead, Chicamuxen, and Elgar Clyde Soper, Olney.

Elders ordained were Francis Irwin Cockrell, Bethesda; James Melvin Griffin, Hyndman, Pa.; Karl Bannet Justus, Sykesville; Earl Gough Kernahan, Baltimore; Lewis Frank Ransom, Lonaconing, and John Lee Williams, Upperco.

Gunfire Shakes English Homes

London, June 9 (AP).—Violence of the gunfire across the English Channel tonight shook seafront houses at Brighton and rattled the windows of houses several miles inland.

Brighton residents said the repercussions of the battle for France were more intense than those felt during the fighting around Boulogne.

Playwright Flies To War Duties

New York, June 9 (INS).—Noel Coward, British playwright, and Madeleine Carroll, English born Hollywood movie star, were enroute to their war-ravaged homeland in France tonight via Pan-American Clipper.

They left LaGuardia Field late this afternoon. Coward headed for Paris and government work, and Miss Carroll to her villa 20 miles south of Paris.

Miss Carroll hoped to see her soldier husband, Maj. Philip Astley, fighting with Allied troops in France.

War Shock Absorbed

By Roger W. Babson

No Slump i nU. S. Industry

DESPITE THE VIOLENT news from Europe, American business has held its ground over the past month. A sensational surge in steel and other heavy industries has canceled out losses in textiles, building, foreign trade, and automobile sales. Business has also absorbed violent shocks in security and commodity prices without throwing the upward trend (which started in mid-April) into reverse.

This is a remarkable situation. Ordinarily when the stock market is hit with a 30 per cent shakeout over a 14-day period, it is as sure a sign of a business lump as is a rapidly falling barometer of a storm. Added to the panic in the security markets is the drastic break in farm produce prices. Wheat, for instance, is off 20 cents a bushel. Naturally, this sharp drop is having its effect on retail trade in rural areas. Sales are already off 10 to 20 per cent in such territories as Kansas City, Dallas and Minneapolis.

TEXTILE MILLS have felt the shock, too. Their schedules dipped 10 to 15 per cent as raw cotton prices were slashed 2 cents a pound. An incessant barrage of war news, 24 hours a day, does not help real estate salesmen close their deals. Consequently, the gains in home building, which were running along smoothly up to May 1, are now being cut down. Latest figures for the country, nevertheless, show 1940 is still topping the level of a year ago. The slowing down in building is reflected in a tapering off of activity in the lumber camps as well.

Automobile sales are beginning to take it on the chin. After listening to a 15-minute broadcast of war news, or a quick perusal of the war extra, the average buyer has the starch taken right out of him. Moreover, loss of the North European markets is a big blow to our exports of automobiles. Motor output in the first half of 1940 has been at a very high level. Now, with big field stocks, with sales slowing down, and with the export markets disrupted, manufacturers are cutting down production. The same situation is true in certain appliance and furniture lines.

THESE UNFAVORABLE trends, however, are all being erased by the tremendous impetus given armament industries. Current appropriations cover the largest peacetime funds ever set aside for our Army and Navy. New factories, training camps, shipyards, machine shops, foundries will be needed to gear America up to wartime needs. I say wartime needs purposely because it seems inevitable to most well-informed people that we will tangle with Germany or Japan somewhere, sometime. Terrific stockpiles of copper, iron, rubber, lumber, tin, aluminum will be needed to produce this vast defense machine.

So much for what has already happened. Gloomy as the war news has been—far more shocking than that which swept across the nation in 1914—our markets and business have absorbed the jolts relatively well. Back in 1914 the market collapsed, then closed, and business dropped sharply. It was six months before we had a rally. This time, as I have predicted right along, the war should give American industry a tremendous lift. Hundreds of thousands of the unemployed should find their way back to jobs (either in industry or in the Army) in the next 12 months.

AMERICA WILL, for awhile, become the world's number one manufacturer, farmer, shipper and banker. The wiping out of Denmark, Holland and Belgium has temporarily given our foreign trade a rough time of it. Those countries, for instance, took over 30 per cent of our wheat exports. The loss of our markets in the neutral countries should soon be made up, however, by our taking over of their trade with South America and with England. We will supply the Allies, for example, with steel which they formerly purchased from Belgium or produced in northern France, with paper which they purchased from Scandinavia, and with foodstuffs which they purchased from Denmark and Holland.

Hence, I believe that, war or peace, our industries will continue to hum. A German victory should mean a far greater defense program than that now contemplated; while an Allied victory should mean billions of dollars for reconstruction. To the extent that world continues its expenditures for luxuries, style goods, and amusements, these armament and reconstruction costs will result in an exhaustion of capital and world wealth. Then a lower standard of living throughout the world will follow unless unnecessary luxury expenditures are curtailed.

THERE IS ONE other possibility. If the Wage and Hour Act could be repealed and if labor unions would be reasonable, we might be able to increase our armament expenditures and still maintain our present standard of living. As long, however, as short-sighted politicians and selfish labor leaders remain in control, I see no hope for this change. The people of the United States—I fear—still fail to realize that only integrity, hard work, intelligence, self-control and sacrifice will save them.

Listen! with Slocum

So you want to go into radio?

There are innumerable branches to the radio industry, but nobody is even interested in the phases that require work, so we'll just consider the matter of entertainers, admitting for the sake of the lecture that announcers are entertaining. I could really go on at some length on that subject, but a daily newspaper is no place for personal problems.

Let's take this business of being an announcer first. If you are a girl, forget it. Don't forget you are a girl, forget your ambition to be an announcer. You can be a girl and croon into a microphone about babies, fashions, foods and other trivia but the feminine voice box was never made to make station breaks, read news, or read commercial copy except that directed to women listeners. And if you are going to handle women's show go out and learn about home economics or fashions or other related subjects.

As a matter of fact, if you are a girl and want to get into radio try singing. There are dozens of current examples on the airwaves every evening that prove the rudiments of a musical training are all that it takes to become a popular singer. And I do mean rudiments.

But back to announcing. WJSV has a fine staff of announcers. Honest. Nice, clear-eyed bright young men who can pronounce the two syllable words, and what is more important, understand 'em. Every-one of the six members of the staff has a specialized training which would explain an unusual voice.

One, Reginald Allen, is a former actor. Another, John Charles Daly, also trod the boards. A third, Gunnar Back, was a professor of English before retiring. The remaining three, Lee Vickers, Hugh Conover, and Joe King, were singers. So the stage, or the lecture platform, or voice training seem to help.

Orphans in Love

by Marion White

Ellen Carlen has loved Peter Storm since both were children. After Peter becomes a public hero in a tenement fire, John Abbott, prominent attorney, makes a place for Peter in his office. Peter thinks Abbott's daughter, Millicent, is most attractive and Mr. and Mrs. Abbott decide it would be a good match if Peter married Millicent, so they could return to Peter without publicity the Tucker estate which they had administered since Jonathan Tucker died, without heir. Ellen has been promoted from a clothes model to a dress designer. She and Peter return to the orphanage for Christmas, and later go to the old Tucker house, which Peter has had cleaned and decorated. Ellen finds a letter from Paris dated 1913 in a Bible, and thrusts it in her pocket when Millicent unexpectedly appears. After Millicent takes Peter back to town, Ellen goes to the orphanage and reads the letter which reveals Jonathan Tucker's only heir, a grandson, who was killed en route home from Europe, left a 2-week-old son. Ellen believes John Abbott knows where he is. Meanwhile, Millicent announces to the Abbotts her engagement to Peter.

Chapter 35

COOPER appeared in the doorway to answer her summons.

"Where's Hulda?" she demanded. "Send her in to me immediately."

The butler's eyebrows lifted. "Hulda's gone, Miss Millicent. She said you told her to——"

Demands Hulda

"Never mind what I told her! She might have known I'd need her. Where is she? Get her back."

"She's gone to the movies, Miss. I don't know what theater."

Millicent sank into the divan, too spent by her anger to argue further. She picked up the torn section of chiffon with hands that trembled.

"You might cut it all off," Peter ventured mildly. "Looks to me as if the dress has five or six skirts."

"Don't be funny. You can't cut away half of a dress and go out to dinner in what's left of it."

There was a low, soothing chime from the grandfather's clock. It announced the half hour after eight. Dinner was to be served at 8:30.

"It's only a rip," Peter tried again. "You can sew it up in a jiffy."

Her eyes reflected a deep scorn as she looked up at him. "I can sew it up again!" She mimicked his words. "What do you think I am, a charwoman? I never had a needle in my hand."

"But anybody can sew."

"I can't! Don't try to compare me with your little seamstress friend."

The words struck him with the force of a blow between the eyes. They tore away the haze which had obscured his proper vision for so many months.

They unleashed the spirit which he had been willing to sell into servitude for this brief glimpse of aristocracy. They washed away, in one tremendous purifying surge, the uncertainty which had gnawed at his heart.

Don't Compare!

Don't try to compare me with your little seamstress friend!

Now, in this first moment of clear, unadulterated reason which he had ever known, he did exactly that. He compared Millicent Abbott with his little seamstress friend. He saw them, side by side, in their true perspective.

He saw the angelic Millicent, suddenly stripped bare of her beatific virtues.

He saw the cold, uncompromising steel in her eyes, tarnishing the golden halo of her hair; he saw the arrogant, demanding curl of her lips, robbing them of all the warmth and tenderness in which he had believed.

And in his mind he saw Ellen, not in any sudden, illuminating vision, but rather as he had always seen her, as he had always known her, in his heart.

Draws Beauty

Millicent, in her demanding, relentless fashion, drew all beauty to her. She was the central focus of every spotlight: from the world about her she absorbed all warmth and brightness and splendor, dulling all else to obscurity.

But Ellen was sunlight itself. Ellen came into a room and everything was touched with new beauty, because beauty was part of her and she radiated it freely and generously.

Ellen came into one's life and filled it with hope and promise and eager, honest ambition. She lifted and developed, where Millicent tore down and destroyed.

He saw all this with a clarity and comprehension which made his former credulity a mystifying adventure into bewilderment. But he saw it too late.

Loves Ellen

He loved Helen. He knew it now, as he had never known it before. He knew it in this moment when down in the dinning room of Manhattan's smartest hotel 400 guests were already opening the novel little heart-shaped place cards which announced his engagement to Millicent Abbott.

The announcement of the engagement of Millicent Abbott, one of the most popular debutantes of the past season, and young Peter Storm, whom the city remembered for his recent bravery in the tenement fire disaster, was a story for the front page of every newspaper.

Up at the boys' school in Riverview, Father Joseph read it over his coffee. He shook his gray head slowly. A sad mistake, he told himself gloomily. Peter, caught in the limelight of a nine-day sensation, had lost his head and stepped out of his element.

When he came to his senses, it would be too late.

His eyes traveled down the column; he read the last paragraphs of the announcement.

"Miss Abbott was educated at the Prince School in New York and at the Conservatory of Art in Paris. She has been one of the most outstanding members of the younger set, and is considered one of the 10 best-dressed young women in the city."

Father Joseph knew little of women's wearing apparel, but he was sure that Peter could not survive the upkeep of so superior a young woman. He wondered vaguely why this Miss Abbott should find Peter so congenial. It was an unusual match, to say the least. A most extraordinary match. And Peter would never be happy.

At practically the same moment, across the campus, in the dining room of the girls' dormitory, Mother Rosa sat down to breakfast and picked up her newspaper. It was folded carefully and laid at her place as usual.

Some unwritten and unspoken tradition had it that the mother superior, as head of the household, should be the first to read the paper.

Whoever was charged with the morning duty of picking it up from the doorstep, always laid it untouched at Mother Rosa's place at the table.

Tradition

The significance of the tradition had been more or less lost. Mother Rosa liked to read her morning paper, but it meant nothing to her whether she received it first, second or last.

That is, not as a general rule. This morning, as soon as she glanced at the first page, her eyes widened in quick consternation, and she looked about sharply to see if any of the sisters were watching her, waiting to observe her confusion.

But apparently not. Sister Cecelia, at the other end of the room, was pouring milk for the younger children, and her plump, rosy face was serene and unconcerned. Across the table, Sister Agatha dug into her grapefruit and murmured her usual remarks about the weather.

"I always say we can expect rain when the wind is in the east. Don't you feel the dampness, Mother?"

"What's that? Oh, the dampness. Yes, of course I feel it, Sister Agatha. And that reminds me . . . will you excuse me? There's something in the office . . ."

She left the table hurriedly, carrying the paper with her. She walked down the hall a bit unsteadily because she could not take her eyes from the story in print.

She mumbled irritably, without knowing that she did so. Thank Heaven, she thought, nobody had seen it. She must destroy the paper. She couldn't go through this day, answering Sister Cecelia's pointed questions and disregarding Sister Agatha's sympathetic glances. Poor Ellen . . . Her heart will break . . . I know it . . .

To Be Continued.

Wise Spending of Defense Funds Urged by Rep. Martin

House Takes Up Emergency Tax Bill Tomorrow; Drastic War Profits Levy Discussed as a Rider to Measure

Fresh insistence on careful expenditure of defense funds and reductions in other outlays was voiced last night as House leaders prepared to take up tomorrow the $1,006,000,000 emergency tax bill.

Passage of the measure in that Chamber by Wednesday was forecast by chiefs of both parties. The measure broadens the bases of the income tax, raises the surtaxes and excise levies and increases the statutory debt limit from $45,000,000,000 to $49,000,000,000.

Meanwhile Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr. (Republican), of Massachusetts, and House minority leader, warned of the danger of reckless spending, while Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, called again for a 10 per cent cut in all Federal expenditures not connected with defense.

The National Economy League also issued a survey of "defense dollars," pointing out that the first step in the Nation's preparedness program should be wise and careful expenditure of the funds which are now being appropriated for national defense.

There was renewed discussion of a move to add a drastic war profits tax to the tax measure as a rider. The House Ways and Means Committee announced Saturday that its experts and Treasury officials would prepare legislation for introduction at the next session of Congress to levy on excess profits made from the armaments program.

Senator LaFollette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, was quoted by the Associated Press last night as saying, however, that he was preparing such legislation now, and that if he received in time data he has requested from the Treasury he would present the proposal when the Senate Finance Committee receives the tax bill from the House.

Senate Republicans were understood to have agreed to back any "reasonable" proposals to return to the Government a share of abnormal profits by concerns filling contracts for airplanes, machine tools, and other armament equipment needed for the defense program.

The La Follette proposal encountered opposition, however, from Senator Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, chairman of the Finance Committee; Senator George (Democrat), Georgia, another committee member, and Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado.

"We are not in war yet, and I see no need for a 'war profits' tax now," Harrison said.

George commented that there was "no sense in crucifying business just because we think that somebody is going to attack us some time in the future and are preparing for such an attack as fast as possible."

Opposes Any New Levy

Adams said he was opposed to levying any additional taxes on business, above the 1 per cent corporation impost and the 10 per cent "supertax" proposed in the House bill for both individual and corporation incomes.

Discussing the steps which the United States must take to prepare its national defense, Senator Byrd in a prepared statement said the crisis facing the United States is more serious than that confronting the country in 1933, when the present Administration took office.

"It must be apparent to all that we cannot expect to pyramid upon existing and continuing deficits in the public revenue the cost of this national defense program," he said.

The Senator added that it was clear to everyone that taxes must be greatly increased, and that all unnecessary expense should be eliminated.
